It is not a time to feel sad, but one of joy. Assuredly it all has a tendency to cause us to look backward instead of forward, and all mankind have had their sorrows, their disappointments and heart-aches. But we should look only to the bright pages of life's history. The dark ones have been mourned over and then sealed with the holiness of sorrow. We live upon our joys; the memories of the past which give us pleasure give us new leases of life. Man was not made to mourn.

As we look into the future our anticipations are for the best, so, in glancing at the past we should let memory rest only in bright places. If it were not for man's anticipations for the future, we would all be without energy and ambition, worse than the brutes who have no care only for the present.

Unlike the aged couple, in whose honor we are here to-day, we would have provided nothing for our comfort in our old age. We would not be doing our duty even towards the world, let alone ourselves.

But like them we should strive to better ourselves and at the same time do our duty toward mankind. We should make the step upon the first round of the ladder of life with determination and a set purpose to do justice between God and man. And at each succeeding step we should renew them and so on until they are so instilled into our very characters that we cannot escape their influence.

If we follow out the precedent to day set before us, as we climb the long ladder of life, when we reach the topmost round we can look down upon the path trod by us and followed by so many for whom we should set a good example, a path which should be narrow, and is so very, very easily wandered from, a sensation of peace and a feeling of satisfaction will take possession of our very souls as we silently glide with the melancholy shadow of death away into the distant future.

CLINTON.

Mr. John Kimball, formerly of the firm of Randall & Kimball grocers of this place died Monday morning of consumption. His health failed him some 18 months since, to the extent that he was compelled to abandon work, but his condition was not until some time after that, considered really serious. It at length, however, developed into pulminary consumption and ended as above. Mr. Kimball was an upright, honorable man, of irreproachable character, a kind husband and affectionate father. He leaves a wife and two children together with countless hosts of friends to mourn his untimely death.

Deputy Sheriff Johnson, of Adrian was on our streets Tuesday morning, and now stories are rife about town that certain arrests are to be made, for alleged official malfeasance.

Frank Scovill, was suddenly called to Jonesville yesterday, on the receipt of the intelligence of the death of a sister at that place.

B. O. Randall & Co. may well pride themselves on having the handsomest store in town, for such it certainly is.

The firm of John H. Miller & Co. is doing a lively business in the matter of buying produce. The sign in front of their store explains it all.

FRANKLIN.

The National Greenback club of Franklin met at Tuttle's Hall last Friday evening and reorganized, and as was stated re-enlisted for four years or "during the war." The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Pres.—E. Leanard; Vice Pres., Harrison Daniels; Secy., S. A. Beers; Asst. Secy., Geo. Tripp; Treas., Milton Burns; Ex. Com., Otis Whelan, Franklin Learnard and J. B. Dowling. The club decided to hold meetings on each alternate Friday evening during the winter, and monthly during the summer, with occasional public meetings addressed by eminent speakers from abroad.

We understand Mr. Mason Camburn received a telegram from Petersburg yesterday announcing the death of a brother.

We were in error last week in reference to Miss Webster teaching the Center school; should have been Miss Coonly of Ypsilanti.

Prof. Lowrie preached at the Congregational church last Sunday morning, and all seemed well pleased, but owing to the small attendance on account of the severe cold, he was requested to preach again next Sabbath when it is hoped the society will decide to give him a call.

Mr. & Mrs. Eli Knight have gone to live with their son-in-law, Mr. Wm. Lamkin on account of the protracted illness of Mrs. Knight who remains in a feeble condition.

Mrs. Orville Kemp has been seriously ill for several weeks and it is feared may not soon recover.

RIDGEWAY.

The roads are splendid.

Who wants to trade watches?

Are we to have a feed grinder this winter?

Eight below zero is the bottom figure for Ridgeway so far.

The well and tank on the Butler R. R. is nearly completed.

Old Mrs. Britten is quite ill.

School opened Monday morning. The attendance is large, and the need of a new house is plainly to be seen by the crowded condition of the old one.

Will Britton bagged a fine turkey while out hunting last week. The boys about the village are making it lively for the rabbits.

The oyster supper last Wednesday evening didn't pan out very big.

Lyman Gilmore of Macon bought the Asa Russell farm, one mile north of the village.

The construction train on the D. & B. R. R. has reached Milan, and it is expected that the iron will be laid to Britton's within a week or ten days.

John C. Palmer is moving into his new house, which he is furnishing new throughout, and when he gets through he will have as comfortable a home as one need to step into.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Clinton is soon to have a cigar and tobacco factory.

The tax in the school district of which Morenci is a part aggregates $1.04 on every $1000 of assessed valuation, which is about the same as last year.

Deerfield Record: The coopers of our village have made during the past apple packing season, 1,600 barrels, divided as follows: Isaac Palmer, 400; Henry Morse and son, 1,200. Besides the above figures, Jesse Chamberlin has hired made 1,500 barrels at his stave mill, three miles west of the village.

Monday forenoon, as Henry Coe, of Blissfield, was alighting from a delivery wagon, the horses suddenly started, and he was thrown under the fore wheels, which passed over him. The team upset the wagon and broke the tongue, but Mr. Coe froze to the ribbons and brought the steeds to a halt without further damage.

Blissfield Advance: Mr. George H. Gilman, of this village, has just had a patent allowed by the Patent Office at Washington, for an iron railroad tie. The scarcity of timber for ties will soon compel railroad companies to look for other material, and this invention of Mr. Gilman's will no doubt at once attract attention when properly brought before the public. The iron tie is eight feet in length, eight inches wide, and one inch thick, being ribbed and concaved on the under side. The rail is fastened to the tie by means of a bolt, which makes it far stronger and safer than by means of the spike used in the wooden tie. We hope Mr. Gilman will have good success in bringing his invention before the public, and the day is not far distant when wooden ties will be discarded by railroads entirely.

Blissfield Advance: On Saturday evening last as James, a thirteen year old son of Mr. P. L. Austin, who resides some three miles down the east side of the river, was engaged in watering a colt, the animal suddenly turned on him, and with his hind feet kicked him on the left temple, crushing the skull and breaking his neck. Mrs. Austin who had observed the boy leading the horse from the stable to the well, near the house, saw the horse running about wildly, and thinking it strange, stepped out-doors to see what was the matter. The grief of the mother was intense, when on discovering but a few feet away the lifeless remains of her boy. A messenger was at once dispatched for Dr. Turner, but human aid was out of the question, death having been instantaneous. Mr. Austin, who was visiting in the east, was informed of the sad news by telegraph, and did not arrive home until Monday evening.

THE COCKLEBURR CLUB.

A New and Thrilling Story.

Since the time that the estimable gentleman who had consented to act as Treasurer of our organization got embarrassed and irregulated with the funds thereunto belonging we have had no regular meeting place. Because, since the Sheriff so ruthlessly fired us out into the street for non-payment of rent, we have been unable until very recently to find any one soft enough to give us a resting-place without planking up the rent in advance. But patience and perseverance will accomplish wonders in the financial as well as the animal world; so we've again achieved a local habitation and a name. And we're not going to give it away, either, for you to go and post our landlord, perhaps.

As all this scuffling around has brought us to the verge of financial collapse, it was resolved unanimously, at last meeting, that something should be done to restore the late statu quo of our treasury. It was, to curtail an elongated narrative, suggested that your servant try to find a buyer for his soul-thrilling memoirs, entitled "Confessions of a Reformed Paragrapher," and donate or lend the proceeds thereof to the club to achieve its rehabilitation. Thereupon the undersigned writer proceeded to read the manuscript for the edification of those who hadn't had the pleasure of perusing it, but before the second chapter was reached I found that at least half a dozen Cockleburrs imagined that they were hit between wind and water, as it were, and that the whole thing was only a malignant, insidious exposure of their little mental corns. By assuring them that I did not refer to them order was restored, but before the fifth chapter was reached the President, Col. Bungstarter, jumped to his feet and roared at me: "Why do you dare, sir, drag my family skeletons to the light of day?"

I replied that I never dragged a skeleton anywhere in my life.

"What do you mean, then, sir, by your impertinent reference to 'Old Doozlebung?'"

"Why," I replied, "Colonel, that's a purely imaginary character; I didn't think there was a Doozlebung in the wide world."

"Didn't know Helena, Arkansaw! I let you know now, then, that my wife's sister married a Doozlebung, and I don't intend to sit quietly by and hear family troubles exposed; no, not even to save the Cockleburr Club from the dengue."

Further reading of the confession had to cease, for it was evident that there wasn't a man in the room but was certain that portions of the manuscript referred directly to him.

Verily, the way of the paragrapher is hard. As it was unanimously resolved that the private piccadilloes and failings of the members of the club should not be used as a fulcrum to boost the financial condition thereof, we had to cast about for some other means to accelerate the velocity of the air currents. Whereupon the undersigned, piqued at the unceremonious manner in which his cherished literary effort had been sat down on, suggested that some one else try his hand at the bellows for a wind-raiser. After considerable discussion it was decided that, whereas, it would take too long to write a novel, or anything else, single-handed; and, whereas, that all were equally implicated in the affair; and, whereas, that we possessed abundant raw material—of the rawest kind, too—for the venture; and, whereas, that time and landlords wait for no man, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the members of this club each write one chapter, to the best of his ability, and according to his own style and his conception of the exigencies of the case.

Considerable ill-feeling was manifested as to who should name the title or block out the plot, and after much wrangling it was decided that Col. Bungstarter should name the offspring as well as write the opening chapter. Plot, there was to be none, each chapter to be so beautifully rounded off that absence of plot would not be noticed.

The Secretary was directed to write just what was dictated to him, as in order to accelerate things the whole thing was to go right along viva voce, beginning at the President and going on down to the underwriter, who was to give all the brides away (and he never gave a girl away in all his life), hang all the villains and dispose of all the characters, either by mysterious disappearance or otherwise.

After clearing his throat, Col. Bungstarter begun:

THE CROOKED REPORTER!

OR,

THE BEER-JERKER'S REVENGE!

A TALE OF THE SERIOUS NEVADA.

It was a dark and stormy night in the Serious Nevada. By the flashes of lightning that almost blinded our hero, a solitary horseman might be seen wending his way amid the peals of thunder that lined the road through the gloomy, Indian-haunted canyon. By getting in front of him we can see by the flashes of lightning that he is young, and also that in his side-pocket glistens something it won't do to fool with too much. Ever and anon, in some horned owl hoots mournfully over his head far up the canyon, he grasps this shining thing, exclaiming

"Ha!"

Mr. Sickembull next!

CHAPTER II.

We draw nearer to our hero, and by the electric light read the legend inscribed upon the shining thing that he holds in a horizontal position to his face; it is hop bitters—here a dozen members jumped to their feet, protesting against any advertisements being rung in on this novel without seeing the proprietors first. Carried.

Far above the roaring of the Alpine storm our hero hears what appears to be the voice of a female in distress. Plunging the spurs into his noble steed, he plunges madly down the mountain side, when, suddenly—

Maj. Jones, next!

CHAPTER III.

When suddenly the scene changed. Four young men are seated around a table, in a Southern California town, whose features bear the stamp of intellect. They were playing poker. The reckless manner in which they won and lost thousands proclaimed their calling. They were newspaper men.

Grasping a handful of gold from the table, the youngest, tossing it toward an auburn-haired maiden hard by, murmured, "Three beers and a straight." As the elder dealt out three cards round, the younger began to sing in a low, plaintive voice:

This is the pair I long have sought,
And mourned bekase I drew it not.

The elder seemed to tumble to his lay, for he refused to straddle the blind and stayed out, but the man with the long hair doubled his ante, and made it steep to come in; but the young one saw him, and was on the point of raising him out of his boots, when—

Capt. Smith!

CHAPTER IV.

When the cries grew louder and louder, until our hero, coming suddenly to the foot of the canyon, beheld a female form perched upon a rock in the middle of a roaring river.

Heedless of danger, he plunged his horse into the seething waters, and, as he grasped her around her slender waist, the horse broke away, and left him alone upon the rock with the maiden. The waters, with exultant gurgles, rose and rose until it was chin-deep around there, when suddenly—

Mr. Snodgrass next!

CHAPTER V.

When suddenly they both rolled over and were drowned, and—

Here the club was in a general uproar of protest against the willful murder of the hero right at the start.

Snodgrass was ruled out.

Mr. Simpson next!

CHAPTER VI.

When suddenly the old man said, "I see your twenty and raise you five."

"I call you. What have you got?"

"Two pair."

"No good," said the old man, gathering in the pot, until he saw that it was two pair of aces the young one had accumulated. There would be nothing strange in that, but the old man had three aces himself, and had begun to manifest a desire to go behind the returns, when a loud crash was heard, and with a shriek the fair maid with the auburn hair entered, crying, "Fire!"

CHAPTER VII.

The scene changes. Pacing up and down in the cell of the prison might be seen a man about forty years of age, more or less. Fifteen years have elapsed since the stormy night we left him perched on a rock in the middle of a mountain torrent.

"Will she never come?" he murmurs, as he glances toward the door.

She enters; with a sob she throws herself on the prisoner's shoulder.

"It's no use, Philander," she cries; "they'll bring in a verdict of murder. The jury's bin playin' poker all night to get the hang of the evidence, and some infernal moke run in a cold hand o' fours on the foreman, an' he is in fur hangin' ye now."

CHAPTER VIII.

The gallows are finished.

The prisoner is playing a last game of seven-up with the Sheriff, when suddenly—

Mr. Green next!

CHAPTER IX.

A tremendous roaring noise is heard and an earthquake strikes the place, tearing the jail asunder, and the prisoner (who, the reader knows, is our hero) and the maiden fly to the railroad in time to—

Mr. Peter, next!

CHAPTER X.

In time to get run over by the 9:15 express. A simple cross marks their lost resting place. Buried in the wild, killed in death.

This novel may be a little jerky, but it has enough raw material in it for a dozen ordinary yarns. And if it is jerky, you must remember that we two writers view things from the same standpoint. To the hands of our countrymen we commit ourselves. Officially,

JACK HOMESPUN.

P. S.—If any trouble grows out of this, I want it distinctly understood that I'm not implicated in the above, only as amanuensis. U. H.

HURRAH! MY WIFE IS HANGED.

A middy in the royal navy, he went ashore at Portsmouth with some messmates, and there made merry until the funds were exhausted and a long bill run up at a tavern at the point. The signal was made for all hands on board, but when the careless middies would have obeyed it the landlady interfered, vowing they should not leave until the reckoning was paid, and called in a bailiff and his men to show she was in earnest. The youngsters threatened and intreated, all to no purpose. The old rule woman reminded them that they would be irretrievably ruined if the fleet sailed without them, and pronounced her ultimatum. Said she to her hopeful debtors: "I will give you all a chance. I am so circumstanced here that I cannot very well carry on my business as a single woman, and I must contrive somehow to get a husband, or at all events, be able to produce a marriage certificate. Now, the only terms upon which I will set you free are that one of you marries me. I don't care a snap which it is, but one of you I will have for a husband, or else to jail you all go and your ship sails without you." Finding the vixen immovable, the unhappy midshipmen cast lots, and Watty drew the fatal slip. The lady procured a license and the knot was tied, after which she bade them, husband included, good-by, intimating that she did not want to see him again, the marriage lines being all she wanted, and these were safe in her possession. The ship sailed, the middies keeping their strange doings at the point a secret, as they had sworn to do before drawing lots. Twelve months later, when the ship was at Jamaica, a batch of English papers reached the midshipmen's berth.—Glancing over them, Watty was attracted by an account of a murder and robbery at Portsmouth, and the execution of the culprits. Suddenly leaping to his feet, he waved the welcome newspaper above his head, shouting, "Thank heaven, my wife's hanged!"—Chambers' Journal.

DEATH'S MASQUERADE.

On Christmas night, 1834, a ball was given by a St. Petersburg merchant. According to custom, candles were placed in the windows of the house, as a well-understood signal, that the maskers who fill the streets of the Russian cities at the holiday period might enter and participate in the festivities without special invitation. Numerous of these unconventional guests arrived and departed, till at length a party dressed as Chinese bore between them a palanquin in which a stately, closely masked personage sat. They explained that this was not only Christmas, but their Prince's birthday, and, sitting him down in the middle of the room, danced a barbarous measure around him and then mingled with the crowd. They spoke French excellently, and were altogether a most mysterious and fascinating party.

Little by little the ball thinned, and still the silent figure held its stately seat in the gorgeous palanquin. Then, for the first time, the host noticed that the followers of the strange Prince had vanished, having contrived to slip out unnoticed. The thing in the palanquin had been a man before it had been strangled to a corpse.

No clew to the authors of this crime was ever discovered. The victim was supposed to be a stranger in Russia, and to have met his fate during a quarrel over some aristocratic gaming table, for the police were not at all active in their efforts to trace the crime to its sanguinary source.

Gentlemen—I wish to inform you of the efficiency of Kidney-Wort on my person. I had been afflicted with rheumatism for three years without relief from any medicine I could get. By recommendation of Mr. Kemp I tried the Kidney-Wort, and half a box entirely relieved me. I have not had any return of the disease since using it, over six month since.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

For December brilliantly closes Volume IV. of this favorite periodical. The opening article is entitled, "Savonarola, the Florentine Reformer," by Alfred H. Guernsey. There is a most interesting one by M. F. Vallette, "The Buried Cities of the East—Excavations around Ninevah and Babylon," "Christian Enterprize in New Zealand," by Rev. Daniel Edwards; "The Nile," etc., are noteworthy articles. The admirable serials, "Hester Morgan's Husband" and "Maid Marjory," are concluded; the department of fiction contains, besides these, some excellent short stories by popular writers. There are several descriptive articles replete with interest and information; the poems are by Adelaide Stout, F. R. Havergal, Mrs. Hemans, etc., etc. It is impossible, however, to convey an idea of the vast variety contained in the 128 quarto pages, literary and artistic; the illustrations number some 100. As the next number commences a new volume, now is the time to subscribe. A single copy is only 25 cents; the annual subscription, $3; 6 months, $1.50; 4 months, $1; sent postpaid.

Godey's Lady's Book for December

Leads all competitors. Rich in engravings, patterns, and literary matter, it certainly deserves its high reputation and large circulation. The publishers announce another new departure, beginning with the January number, by giving a complete novel in every issue, and all the old departments to be preserved. We would suggest to our readers to leave at this office their subscriptions for the HERALD and Godey's Lady's Book, both of which we will furnish for the low price of $3.00. These two publications would make desirable and acceptable Christmas presents to the absent members of families, as well as to the loving hearts around the home circle. The January number of Godey's Lady's Book will be ready about December first.

BRIGHT EYES, the beautiful Ponca maiden, widely known as an instance of the power of education and kindness in developing fine traits of womanhood in the Indian, has written a tale of Indian child-life (her first story) for the ST. NICHOLAS magazine. It is said to be true to life and full of beautiful feeling. Bright Eyes, with her brother and three sisters who have been educated at the Omaha Agency, are the only members of her large family who can speak English. Her father has been, or is, the head chief of the Poncas, and is said to be a man of noble character.

Mrs. J. B. Wilson, Tiffin, Ohio, says: I have worn an Improved Excelsior Kidney Pad, and received more relief than from all remedies I have ever tried. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers.—See Adv.

A NEW PAYING OCCUPATION FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

The handsome Nickel Plated New Home Lamp being introduced to the public this season, is the most meritorious article ever offered Agents to make money with, is safer, and more convenient than the Student Lamp, which has heretofore had the reputation of being the Safest Lamp made. It has a clamp to firmly attach it to the Sewing Machine, Piano, Organ, Desk, etc. The fear of the ordinary lamp being accidentally upset, or thrown from the table, is entirely removed by this simple contrivance. It can be adjusted to throw the light just where it is wanted to suit the eyes, and can be converted into a handsome wall lamp. It has the best argand burner, a filling indicator, and convenient match box, and its price is within the reach of everyone. It has been fully tested and editorially endorsed by the "Western Christian Advocate," "Am. Christian Review," "Herald and Presbyter," "Journal and Messenger," and "Christian Standard," the leading Religious papers of Cincinnati, and is endorsed by the Mayor and Post-Master of Cincinnati, the Agent of the American Express Companies, as being the Safest, Most Convenient and best Lamp made.

There are three reasons why Agents should seek such an article to canvass for—first for its absolute safety and great convenience, it is needed in every home—second its low price makes its sale immense—third it will be a credit to handle such an article. One southern Agent writes, it sells faster than Gen. Lee's portrait sold right after the war, another writes it beats the palmy days of the Sewing Machine, its rapid sale, low price, and liberal terms surprise old Agents.—Address Home Lamp Co., Cincinnati, O. Mentioning our paper and they will give you full particulars and exclusive territory to canvass in.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a powerful remedy, which can be taken internally as well as externally by the tenderest infant. It cures almost instantly, is pleasant, acting directly upon the nervous system, causing sudden buoyancy of the mind. In short the wonderful effects of this most wonderful remedy cannot be explained in written language. A single dose inhaled and taken according to directions will convince any one that it is all that is claimed for it. Warranted to cure the following diseases: Rheumatism or Kidney Disease in any form, Headache, Toothache, Neuralgia, Sprains, Bruises, Flesh Wounds, Bunions, Burns, Corns, Spinal Affection, Colic, Cramping Pains, Cholera Morbus, Flux, Diarrhoea, Coughs, Colds, Bronchial affection, Catarrh, and all aches and pains, external and internal. Greatest Remedy Known.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumptive is certainly the greatest medical remedy ever placed within the reach of suffering humanity.—Thousands of once hopeless sufferers, now loudly proclaim their praise for this Discovery to which they owe their lives. Not only does it positively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Hoarseness and all affections of the Throat, Chest and Lungs yield at once to its wonderful curative powers as if by magic. We do not ask you to buy a large bottle until you know what you are getting. We therefore earnestly request you to call on your druggists, M. Wright & Son, and get a trial bottle free of cost which will convince the most skeptical of its wonderful merits, and show you what a regular one dollar size bottle will do. For sale by M. Wright & Son, Tecumseh.

Important to Consumptives.

Rev. Dr. Cass, while a medical missionary to the East Indies, had placed in his hands the formula for a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affectations; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Complaints, Debility, etc. After having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, he feels it a duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The Recipe will be sent free of charge to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address, with stamp, (naming this paper,) Dr. M. E. Cass, 1257 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Given Up by the Doctors.

Where doctors have failed to cure, and have given their patients up to die, Electric Bitters have often been used, and a cure effected, greatly to the astonishment of all. Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Urinary Organs are positively cured by Electric Bitters. They invariably cure Constipation, Headache and all Bilious Attacks. Try them and be convinced that they are the best medicine ever used. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co. at fifty cents a bottle.

Another Railroad Project.

A new cut-off from the Wabash Butler road to Toledo is projected. The Toledo Telegram says of it: "A gentleman said to the reporter yesterday that he thought the project of building a line of road to Morenci, Mich., to intersect the Butler road southwest of Adrian, promised better results for the city than any of the other projects agitated at the present time. Not only would the valuable local traffic of a rich territory be secured, but a hold so firm upon the Wabash would be obtained by Toledo that all the schemes of Detroit to secure Wabash traffic would come to naught. The road could be built very cheaply, and this gentleman is of the opinion that it would pay handsomely, independent of the fine results which would come to the city from furnishing the Wabash a double track to Logansport. He thinks it would be well for our capitalists and business men to take the matter in hand and push it thro'. It may be said that the project meets with a great deal of favor, and it is probable if it was given definite shape it would go through all right."

ADRIAN college, last Sunday afternoon suffered another severe loss by fire. The fire was discovered in the building known as North Hall where a number of the students have their dormitories. At the time of discovering the fire there were only about six students present and they sent the alarm to the city by one of their number, while the others commenced to [illegible] from the rooms. The fire department were soon on hand but their efforts were of no account as a strong wind prevailed and the fire had too great a headway before it was discovered. The other buildings were saved and the walls of the burned building were not injured so much but that they may be repaired. The building was valued at $20 000. The loss is estimated at $10-000, the insurance was $7 000. It is not known whether the fire was caused by a defective flue or stove. The citizens of Adrian furnished quarters for the students whose apartments were burned. The recitations will proceed as usual although there is a lack of room.

A significant article by the Hon. George S. Boutwell in the North American Review for December, entitled "The Future of the Republican Party," is sure to arrest public attention. Written after the result of the recent elections had been ascertained, this article defines the position which the Republican Party is, in logic and in policy, bound to assume toward the Southern States. Concession, compromise, conciliation, the author says in substance, will no longer be tolerated. No person is to be admitted to a seat in the Senate, unless the record of his election is clear. New laws are to be passed for the supervision and protection of the ballots in the elections of members of the House of Representatives and Presidential electors. The civil magistrates must have the means within call (the army), of protecting the ballot and keeping the peace. The United States must insure to the people of each state a truly republican form of government. No grants will be made for internal improvements in any southern state where the equality of all men before the law is not a living, practical fact.

A Great Paper.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to one of the greatest newspapers of the age—one that secures the best writers in this country and Europe, regardless of expense; has the best and fullest book reviews of any paper in the country; has able articles upon financial subjects; has departments devoted to Fine Arts, Biblical Research (something that cannot be found in any other newspaper in the United States), Farm and Garden, Insurance, Weekly Market Reports, Cattle Market, Prices Current, Dry Goods Quotations, etc.—in fact, a newspaper fully suited to the requirements of every family, containing a fund of information which cannot be had in any other shape, and having a wide circulation all over the country and in Europe. We refer to The Independent, of New York. "The largest, the ablest, the best." See advertisement, in another column, and send for specimen copy.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Take Them at Their Word.

Philadelphia Times: All over the State small politicians are rising up and getting ready to demand the post offices and other places when Garfield comes in. Perhaps it will occur to the new President to retain the present incumbents and remind all applicants that they voted against a change.

An Unfortunate Precedent.

Detroit Free Press: The Post hopes that in view of the development of the Morey letter business, the doors of the White House will be closed to Barnum and Hewitt. Even if they were personally guilty of the act, there is a precedent against shutting them out of the White House, since the time when President Grant invited an attorney under indictment for blowing open a safe, to take dinner with him.

The Beauties of Protection.

Louisville Courier-Journal: A few days ago the spinners at Fall River struck for higher wages, seeing probably that the Republican pledges of a "raise" were not carried out after the election of Garfield. On October 1 these spinners suffered a reduction of ten per cent. in their wages. Under a protective tariff wages are always uncertain, both as to quantity and permanence. This is the experience of all factory hands since the high tariff went into operation. Their wages would be high for a little while, and then they would be reduced or cut off entirely to suit the manufacturer's convenience.

More Truth than Fiction.

New York Tribune: "Four years of imbecility was as much as the people could stand, and the pigmies have been overthrown. They would rather be governed by a set of rascals than by a gang of pretentious ignoramuses."—This is the view of a Democratic editor in South Carolina upon the recent election. There are some trifling inaccuracies in the explanation, such as that point about the "rascals," but as a maiden effort to tell the truth, it is highly creditable.

Mr. Kelly and the State.

New York Sun: Bitter as the discontent with Mr. Kelly in this city is, it appears to be much more bitter in the country portions of the State.

He is not blamed so much for any particular thing as because he is believed to have been the one malignant influence that defeated the election of Hancock.

Why does not Mr. Kelly become a monk? If he were to settle on the snowy mountains of Switzerland, with a pair or a pack of fine dogs, he might save the lives of weary and worn and astray passengers. Here it is a question whether he can save his own bacon.

Will Do Better With Garfield.

Philadelphia Times: The idea of electing General Grant to the Presidency this year instead of waiting till 1884 has been started in the West. It is reported that the electors for Mississippi are willing to vote for him, and think the whole body from the Southern States would do so if the additional forty-seven votes could be assured from the North. There is no law against this, but there is no probability whatever that it will be done. Unless General Grant has revised the opinions he has expressed on the stump within a month the South will do much better to take its chances with Garfield as President.

The People Will Not be Trifled With.

Detroit Evening News: The two great parties are so nearly balanced in the next House of Representatives that reports are current of crooked practices to secure its organization in the interest of one party or the other. It is asserted that the Democratic clerk will place on the rolls the names of Democrats from close districts who have secured fraudulent or questionable certificates. On the other hand it is openly announced that the Republicans mean to recruit their small majority by unseating several members from the South upon various pretenses. Any such trickery will certainly react on the party that resorts to it, and neither can afford to run the risk. There has been a reasonably full and fair election, and the people are not in a mood to have it trifled with.

Hudson Post: Rushworth Jordan, of this village was arrested yesterday on the charge of perjury. The offense arose from the defendant swearing in his vote on election day. He was not registered a voter, and swore that owing to his being sick he was unable to go to the clerk's office and have his name registered. The prosecution claim that he was on the streets on registration day.

Deerfield Record: A new wire cable which connects the water wheel under the saw mill with the grist mill machinery, was put in last Saturday. The cable is 200 feet in length.

MESSRS. CHARLES KUHMLER and Frank Robbins, University students, are spending the Thanksgiving vacation with friends here.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

PROGNOSTICATIONS.

The New Cabinet — The Next House of Representatives—Gen. Sherman.

Washington, Nov. 19, 1880.

Prognostications and speculations concerning the new Cabinet and the organization of the next Congress take precedence now in this city of political gossip. Even the approaching session of Congress, a nearer event, elicits less interest at this time. We have had quite a number of prominent politicians here during the last week, and the curiosity to learn what they are driving at, and to obtain their views, is all absorbing. We could not live if it were not for this sort of thing. There is not a little anxiety to settle the question as to the influence likely to prevail in making up the new administration—whether Senator Conkling and his associates in the Grant canvass will have the post of honor or not. I could not begin to give you all the "slates" that have been reported, nor would it be of especial value, for it is more than probable that no one but General Garfield himself has any very definite and authoritive ideas on the subject. Some of the prophets place Senator Don Cameron in the War Office, and General Logan or ex-Senator Hitchcock in charge of the Interior Department, with Postmaster James, of New York, as Postmaster General. Emery Storrs, of Chicago, is mentioned as a possible Attorney General, and Chairman Jewell is assigned a foreign mission, since his withdrawal from the Senatorial race in Connecticut, in favor of Hawley.

As to the organization of the next House of Representatives, there is really more opportunity for the exercise of one's judgment. It is a safe prediction that Secretary McPherson, the former Clerk, will go back to the position from which the Democrats retired him in 1874. He was a competent and popular officer, and by reason of his position as Secretary of the Congressional Campaign Committee, has the inside track over any competitor in the canvass. The only thing likely to defeat him would be an unfortunate combination on the Speakership. Mr. Kasson is said to be McPherson's candidate for Speaker, and should Mr. Frye be elected Senator from Maine, he would be out of the way and Kasson's chances good. Yet there are two or three contingencies that may upset this arrangement, and if McPherson has formed an alliance with Kasson, as reported, it might be disastrous. At present, however, the outlook is that such a combination would sweep the deck. Both Judge Kelley and Mr. Conger are mentioned as candidates for the Speakership.—The former is denominated the "Father of the House," having served eleven consecutive terms—twenty-two years,—and the latter is understood to have a good chance for the Michigan Senatorship. George C. Gorham expects to be returned to his old position as Secretary of the Senate, if the Republicans can control that body after March 4th, but that now seems hardly probable, unless Mahone, of Virginia, votes with the Republicans. Mahone was here a few days ago, and had interviews with prominent officials, but no one other than himself knows how he will act. Judge Davis is also a rather uncertain Democrat, and all things considered, the next Senate is awfully mixed. Possibly Kellogg, of Louisiana, may be turned out this winter and a Democrat seated.

The report that General Sherman will shortly be placed on the retired list is true, notwithstanding the authorized statement from the War Department to the contrary. The announced intentions of the President have nothing to do with it. The General does not, in the event that he carries his expressed purpose into effect, intend to ask to be retired until next April, when President Hayes will be merely Mr. Hayes, and when the present authoritative voice of the War Department will be that of an humble citizen. General Sherman has the right, having served in the army thirty years, to ask to be retired, and it is understood that he prefers life in St. Louis with his grandchildren and a retired officer's pay, to the mere honor of being a subordinate to the next Secretary of War in Washington, where he will be under the regulations of the army to be approved by the President in a few days. In the event of his retirement General Sheridan will be called to Washington and General Hancock assigned to command at Chicago unless he prefers to remain where he is, in which case General Schofield would likely succeed General Sheridan.

Colonel R. M. Scott, in charge of the publication of the official records of the war of the rebellion, reports that the work has steadily progressed during the past year. Important additions have been made by voluntary contributions to the records, both Union and Confederate. It is estimated that the entire publication, which it is proposed to divide into four series will require ninety-six volumes.

DR. FRANK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

A New York telegram states that Vanderbilt has decided to extend the Canada Southern to Chicago at once by building a line from Fayette, the present terminus of the C. S. R. to Chesterton, on the Lake Shore, at the Southern extremity of Lake Michigan. This will give him two trunk lines between Chicago & Buffalo, one of which (the Canada Southern line) will be much shorter, and have much easier grades than any other road between those two points. The new line will furnish the best route from Chicago to New York for fast passenger travel and heavy freight trains.

THE Hillsdale school board are spending their valuable time just at present making fools of themselves. The three Greenbackers on the board vote every time to raise money for school purposes, and the three Republicans vote against it, claiming that the officers are not properly elected. Nothing can be done, and the teachers have not had their pay for some time. The janitor says there is only wood enough to last 10 or 12 days longer, and if no money is voted the school will have to close.

LAST Saturday afternoon as a little son of Abijah Packard was playing on the corner of Chicago and Railroad street, a team came around the corner unexpectedly, the driver looking at some object behind him instead of at his team. The boy, as soon as he saw the team, commenced to scramble out of the way, but the whiffletrees caught him and threw him under the wagon, both wheels passing over his legs.—The wagon was a heavy lumber wagon and injured the little fellow so severely that it will be some time before he will be able to use his limbs.

SELDOM before have the farming community in general reaped the harvests of a more productive year. The farmers in this section have stored away the fruits of their fields until granaries and barns are filled to roof boards. Not only has no crop failed them but the wheat and corn fields have rarely been covered with so many fruitful shocks as this year. The orchard trees have born fruit that must necessarily rot on account of its abundance, and so with all the other crops. Farmers can sit down to-day to their Thanksgiving dinner and feel grateful for their year's labor and its harvests.

THE plat of ground known as the Old Cemetery, upon which parties, during the summer, laid out a croquet ground, has come to be a disputed piece of property. Mr. Van Vleet, fearing a suit was to be brought ag'st him by the village for trespass, in laying out the croquet grounds, appeared before the Common Council at their last session and declared that he held the title to that piece of property, and that the village, which has always supposed to possess it, had no legal claim for its possession. Mr. Van Vleet said he would substantiate his claim by the testimony of General Brown and Ezra F. Blood. The Common Council fail to see why the property, which they have so long kept up, should thus unexpectedly become the property of a private individual without their consent. It is more than likely that the affair will give rise to litigation between the corporation and Mr. Van Vleet. Both sides seem to claim a legal title to the property, and the courts will probably have to decide the dispute.

AN UNJUST CLAIM.

At the session of the Common Council on the evening of September 20th, 1880, Hreeman Hand presented a claim against the village for damages to buggy and harness and loss of horse, amounting to $235. The claim, at a later meeting, was reported back to the Council by the committee with no recommendation for payment. Hand, thinking that the action was unjust, has made several efforts to have the Council allow his claim, and finally at the meeting last week, he, through his attorney, made known to them the basis for his claim, and declared, by his actions and words, to the Council, that he intended to have the amount of his claim if he had to bring suit against the corporation for damages. The Council then directed the village attorney to look up the matter.

The claim is for a horse that was killed on the bridge at the White mill pond. It seems that Hand was driving home and that his horse became frightened at some persons in the road and ran against the railing of the bridge and was killed, and considerable damage was done to the harness and buggy. So Hand immediately claims payment for the loss on account of the construction of the bridge.

From these facts it appears that there is no foundation for such a claim, and the Council is perfectly right in refusing to allow it. Mr. Hand should have taken action against the men in the road from whom his horse took fright, and not against the corporation. The bridge was constructed in a manner that made it perfectly safe for teams to cross, as they have done for years.

If the Council pay this claim without taking recourse in the highest point of the law, they will establish a precedent that may force them hereafter to drain, unjustly, the public treasury, in the payment of the most absurd claims.

VERY MUCH DISGUSTED.

Last Monday afternoon a sable specimen of humanity about three shades darker than a block of Ohio coal, entered the HERALD counting room and enquired for "de proprietor ob dis yere 'stablishment." He was directed to the editor who was seated behind the counter. He politely removed his stovepipe hat, made a very low bow and proceeded to disclose the nature of his business.

"I am de Rev. Mr. C. of Toledo de cullud church ob dat great western city an' in debt, and I'se bin commissioned by de Lawd to trabel on de highways and bye-ways an' take in de spondulicks fur to obliquidate dat 'ar debt." He then hauled out his subscription paper. The Tecumseh list consisted of two fifty cent pledges by two ladies of the village, and five gentlemen by the name of "Cash" had signed twenty-five cents each, making a grand total of $2.25.

The proprietor politely informed him that he was always ready to aid home enterprises, but that he didn't feel able to assist in building churches for Toledo. "Why don't you canvass Toledo for aid?" said he. "Toledo is a rapidly growing, wealthy city. It is the future great metropolis of America. A few days canvassing in Toledo would put your church on its feet undoubtedly."

"Canvassin,' sah, I wish you to understan,' sah, dat I'se not canvassin.' I'se disengaged in de lucrative undertakin' ob soliciting' finanshel donations to obliquidate de debt on de house ob de Lawd. Does you take dis yere chile fo' a book agent? Good day, sah." And his righteous indignation fairly lifted his hat from his head as he strode out of the office.

DIED.

CURTIS—Charles F. Curtis died Oct. 13th, at the age of 38 years, 1 month and 23 days.

Deceased lived in Tecumseh until the spring of 1880, then removed to Milan where he died. He leaves a wife and child to mourn his untimely death—ever being a constant and loving husband and father. During his sickness he was very patient, and toward the last was much of the time in prayer. Charles was loved by all who knew him and all were his friends. Yes, we shall miss him, but our loss is his gain. He died clinging to Christ. May heavenly comfort be ministered to the bereaved family.

Farewell! dear one, a long farewell!
For we shall meet no more,
'Till we are raised with thee to dwell,
On that bright happy shore,

Our friend and brother too is dead;
The cold and lifeless clay
Has made in dust its silent bed,
And there it must decay.

Farewell again, dear one, farewell!
Soon we shall rise to thee,
And when we meet, no tongue can tell,
How great our joys shall be.

No more we'll adorn thee, parted one,
But lift our ardent prayer,
And every thought and effort bend
To raise and join thee there.

THE WIFE'S SHARE OF THE WORK.

I scarcely remember any writer who has ever ventured to say that the half of the work of the world is actually accomplished by women; and very few husbands who would be otherwise than greatly startled and amazed, if not indignant, if not derisive, at the suggestion of such an idea as that the work of their wives was equal to their own. And yet for my part I think it so, so far as I can see, the working-man's wife, who has to cook and clean and wash and mend, and do all the primitive services of life for her family, has harder and more constant work than her husband has; and rising upward in the ranks of life, I think the same balance goes on, at least until the level of wealth and leisure is reached, at which the favorites of fortune, like the lilies, toil not, neither do they spin. But I am not concerned with those heights. What dukes and duchesses do, and which of them works the hardest, will scarcely tell upon the argument; nor am I deeply versed in the natural history of millionaires.—But so far as I am acquainted with the facts of existence, the woman's hands are everywhere as full of natural occupation as are those of the man.

The man's work lasts a certain number of hours, after which he has his well-earned leisure, his evening to himself, his hours of recreation or of lounging, but his wife has no such privileged amount of exemption from toil. Her work is "never done." She has the evening meal, whatever it may be, to prepare and to clear away, and the children to get to bed, and the mending to do, in the hours when he is altogether free, and considers himself with justice to have a right to his freedom. In very few cases does it occur to the woman to grumble at this, or to wonder why her lot should be harder than his. It is natural, it is her share. The whole compact of their married life is based upon this, that she should do her work while he does his; and hers is the share which is "never done." I do not say a word against this law of nature; but I object that, while this is the case, the poor woman who works so hard is considered as a pastive object of her husband's bounty, indebted to him for her living, and with no standing-ground or position of her own. She is so considered in the eye of the law; and, though the foolishness of the sentiment is too manifest in her individual case to be insisted upon, yet she is implied in the general sweeping assertion which includes all married women. "Men must work and women must weep," says the ballad. I would like to know what the fisher-women of our sea-coasts say to this lugubrious sentiment, or how much time they find to indulge in that luxury.

Which of the two does the reader suppose has most to do,—the merchant's clerk, for instance, who earns his salary by six or eight hours' work in his office, or his wife, who has to pinch and scrape, and shape and sew, and sit up late at nights and rise early in the mornings, in order to keep up a neat and cheerful house, and turn out the children in such a guise as to do no discredit to their father's black coat? If I had to choose between the two, I should choose the husband's share and not the wife's. The man is more exposed to outside risks and discomforts; but the moment he enters his home he is privileged to rest and be waited on as much as if he were a sultan. The same rule exists everywhere. Among shop-keepers of all but the highest class, the wife, in addition to her natural work, takes her share in the business, and such is the case in a great many other occupations. She keeps the books; she makes out the bills; in one way or another, she overflows from her own share of the work into his.

Usually wealth means a cessation more or less of labor. But a great lawyer or a great doctor, for instance, may have reached the very height of success without having his actual toil diminished; and his wife in that case may be carried high up on the tide of his success to a position of ease and luxury which bears little proportion to the labor with which he must still go on, keeping up the reputation and career which he has made. Even in that case, she will have a great establishment to manage, servants to rule and social duties to perform, and always, the first and most sacred duty of all, the children to care for, which makes her life anything but an unoccupied one. But the wife of a professional man, who is struggling into work and celebrity has as tough a task as her humbler neighbor.—Mrs. Oliphant, in Fraser's Magazine.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it.

TESTIMONY

Of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1876.

DR. S. D. HOWE,

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1873, we called on you, having very little hope of derriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

PREPARATION OF FOOD.

Very much is claimed for fodder preserved by ensilage because of the chemical changes which take place in the silo, and similar claims are made for food that is prepared by cooking. That there is undeniably substantial grounds for these claims may well be doubted, for carefully conducted experiments in some instances at least have shown them to be without foundation. Cooked food, in certain cases, would be expected to be more easily digestible, but this is not by any means an invariable rule, even if it is a rule at all. In the case of some foods consumed by man, it is a well known fact cooking makes them less easily digestible, and places it among the questions that are undecided. We are not saying that steaming, cooking, etc., are not attended with advantages, but we are compelled to say that experiments have not demonstrated that steaming or cooking add to the digestibility.

In 1862 experiments were made under competent supervision at the Dahme Experiment Station, with rye straw fed to sheep, and the result was that it was demonstrated that neither fermenting nor cooking is added to digestibility. Experiments more recently made have shown, indeed, that steaming decreased the digestibility of hay. The object being in these cases to determine the value of cooking or steaming only, the fodder was allowed to cool. If fed while in a warm state, there is no doubt that the stimulant which the warmth would give the system would be beneficial. But stimulating warmth is one thing, and the increase of digestibility is quite an other. Animals themselves will, usually, if opportunity is offered, select the food which is best for them; and it is a fact that they do not show a preference for cold steamed or cooked fodder over dry, and some experiments go so far as to affirm that a preference is shown for dry fodder.

But the digestibility is not, as has already been intimated, the only thing to be considered in feeding stock. The tastes of the animals must not be lost sight of. A very digestible and nutritious food may be, in its raw state, unpalatable to animals, which most insure a comparatively light consumption of it under the most favorable consideration. We have this constantly illustrated in human diet.—Cooking meat, especially to the degree which many people demand, does not add to the digestibility. On the contrary, it decreases it. But to the vast majority of people, uncooked meat is so unpalatable that unless driven to it by excessive hunger, they will not eat it, and even under such extreme circumstances, they will eat only what is absolutely necessary to partially appease a consuming appetite. Raw eggs are more digestible than cooked eggs, but the palate is better pleased with this article of food in a cooked condition.

So it is many times with the cow, horse, hog and sheep. They prefer a warm meal, and will consume large quantities of food in a warm cooked condition, which they would scarcely touch if it were uncooked; and may consume more of even a palatable food when cooked. The question, therefore, is whether the additional quantity consumed will overcome the disadvantages of comparative indigestibility when that is the result. Non-digestion of food in the case of a fattening animal or dairy stock, means less fat in the one instance and less milk in the other. It is a pretty well settled fact that oat meal as a human diet is not of easy digestibility, and yet those who consume it find that it is an excellent food. Such facts must be taken into consideration by feeders, or feeding cannot be conducted intelligently.

In feeding, too, the digestibility by different animals should always be understood and well considered. Oxen, cows and sheep, for instance, digest the same fodder equally well. But in the case of non-ruminating animals, coarse fodder is less digestible than by the ruminating. At one of the experiment stations in Europe the following facts have been determined: 1. Sheep digest meadow hay fully twelve per cent. better than the horse does. 2. The non-nitrogenous constituents of hay and the crude fiber of hay are better digested by sheep than by the horse. 3. The digestibility of wheat straw was found to be equal with the sheep and horse, but only about half was digested. 4. Concentrated feeding stuffs, such as oats, corn and beans—the latter soaked in water—were found to be equally digestible by horse and sheep.

As in all experiments, these mentioned were influenced by peculiar conditions, but it is believed that the main features established will hold good under all circumstances.

When old Mr. Higginsworth was asked if he took a newspaper, he replied that "since our member of Congress stopped sending me the 'Congressional Record' I don't take any, but I guess I kin get along without it. It never gives much news any how."

SOME ITEMS IN FARM ECONOMY.

The arrangement of the buildings and the division of the farm into fields depends so much upon the character of the farm, the kind of farming, individual taste, etc., that it is out of the question to have a fixed plan that is the best one for all farms of any given size. There are certain general principles which should serve as a foundation for the arrangement, but the details necessarily vary greatly. For example, if possible, the barns should be upon a rise of ground where a cellar can be built opening to the lower ground at the rear. The fields should be so arranged that there shall be as little fencing as possible, and so located that all the fields can be easily reached from the lane. A long field has considerable advantage over one of the same area that is square—in the longer "bouts," and therefore less time spent in turning, plowing, harrowing, sowing, harvesting, etc. A pasture close to the stables is always handy, and other things being equal, the orchard should not be put at the rear of the farm, where the wood lot had best be located. There is much labor to be saved in having everything so placed—and this applies to the various details that seem trivial at first sight—that there will be no extra steps or turns in doing the every day work of the farm. For example, many days' work can be saved by having the pump in a handy corner of the barn-yard, where the stock from a number of yards may come to the troughs. If the matters of the farm are not already economically arranged, it would be well to make such changes of fences, buildings, etc., as to finally secure the desired end. By degrees the thoughtful farmer will improve his farm until it approximates to a model and therefore an economical farm.—American Agriculturalist.

It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on Rheumatism, kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co's. and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

SELECTION OF BREEDING STOCK.

The art of breeding may be summed up in the one word, selection, or it may be expressed in the common rule of good breeding—"Always select the best." To be able to tell the best is the most difficult point in the breeding of farm stock. The successful breeder must have a clear idea of the qualities sought, and the quickest and best method by which such ends may be reached. He must necessarily be keen of sight to observe the good and bad points, and the causes by which they have been brought about. His judgment must be of the best to suggest remedies for defects, and new methods for bringing out valuable characteristics. "He will prove himself the most successful breeder who can select with the most correct judgment." Edward Hammond—whose breeding in sheep has been so successful, once said, when asked what proportion of the rams bred by himself he would willingly use in his own flock, answered, "Not one in three hundred." This is but an instance of the care, skill, judgment, and we may add, present sacrifice exercised by the true breeder. We have said that in profitable breeding the selection must be for a distinct and well defined purpose. The first principle in stock breeding was the selection of animals adapted to the circumstances of the given farm, its size, quality of food, etc. The ancients knew that the breeds of animals that had lived for a long period of time on hard fare and a poor soil would do better on moderate land than those that had the highest kinds of keeping. Animals are much like plants, as they do not thrive well if transplanted from a rich to a poor soil.—American Agriculturist.

POUND CAKES.—Beat up one pound of fresh butter to a cream with a wooden spoon, then the same of sifted sugar and a little lemon zest; add ten eggs, two at a time, and lastly stir in one pound and a quarter of flour; put into papered hoops. Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—AND THE ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more for his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict, may be consulted at his office, St. Louis, Mo., until the 20th of December, after that at his New York office. Office address is in the St. Louis city newspapers.

Mr. B. F. George, Attorney at Law, Kent, Union Co. Iowa, treated by Dr. Sherman at his St. Louis office, writes: "Having used your Rupture treatment, and having been permanently cured, I have spoken highly of its merits and recommend it to my friends."

Dr Sherman is the discoverer of the only known cure for Rupture by local external treatment.

No man is safe who has a Rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is steadily progressive, even unto death, and he is wise who takes the necessary steps to be effectually relieved of it before the day of suffering and gloom comes upon him.

Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day. During treatment any kind of active exercise or labor can be performed without interfering with the treatment, and with safety from the dangers of strangulated Rupture. HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen, and merchants of his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies. The afflicted should read it and inform themselves.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN

251 Broadway, cor. Murray St., N. Y., and 43 Milk Street, Boston.
Beware of certain confidence men and imposters who represent themselves as Dr. Sherman.

THE INDEPENDENT.

"The foremost religious newspaper in the United States."—Joseph Cook.

The Independent seeks the patronage of the public on three grounds, as follows:

1st. It is the largest weekly religious newspaper published in the world.

2d. It employs as contributors more able writers, at home and abroad, than any other weekly newspaper.

3d. It gives its readers a wider range of topics and more and fuller departments than they can find elsewhere in any journal.

The Independent consists of 32 pages, neatly cut and pasted. It is printed from clear type (we stereotype the pages weekly, and, hence, every issue is really printed with new type) and on good paper, and mechanically it is unexcelled.

There is no question of prominence in religion, politics, science, education, finance, or any other department of human knowledge which The Independent does not discuss. It has regular departments devoted to Biblical Research, Missions, Religious Intelligence, Book Reviews and Literary News, the Sunday School, Elocution, Science, Sanitary questions, Fine Arts, the movements of ministers, Personalities, News of the Week, Financial and Commercial matters, including weekly Prices Current, Market Reports, Cattle Market, Dry Goods Quotations, Flowers and Farming, and Insurance. In its religious department it gives news and statistics of all denominations of Christians, everywhere. In fullness, accuracy, and comprehensiveness this department is unequaled. Several pages of stories and poems adapted to old and young are given every week, with a column of Puzzles.

From time to time the Sermons by eminent ministers are published. The current topics of the day are discussed in our editorial columns freely and vigorously. We are not afraid to state our opinions.

WIDE AWAKE FOR 1881.

If the Boys and Girls of America could but see the piles of delightful manuscripts, and the beautiful drawings for them, waiting to be grouped into the twelve numbers of WIDE AWAKE for 1881, we are sure that during the next three months the Subscription List of the magazine would be more than doubled. Out of many brilliant features we announce the following, leaving delightful surprises in store.

Perhaps first in general interest will be the Publishers having recently completed arrangements abroad with Mr. George MacDonald to write and send them the original manuscript of a Serial Story for older readers, which form its subject and character Americans will find of greater interest than any of his former books. This story, the title of which will be announced later, will be given complete during 1881, in Monthly Supplements, thus giving free to every subscriber one of Mr. MacDonald's longest and finest stories.

A NEW STORY BY GEO. MACDONALD,

Those who remember with delight that charming home story of the "Dogberry Bunch" will read with still greater delight a Story of the Ohio Hill Country, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood. Those who have read this Serial in Manuscript pronounce it one of the most fascinating stories they ever read. It is as gay and sparkling as a wild mountain brook. Mr. Geo. F. Barnes will illustrate this story with thirty-six drawings.

Mrs. A. M. Diaz has written the Little Folks own serial, and it will be very fresh and funny. At least one hundred and twenty illustrations will accompany it. Those famous twin boys, the Jimmy-johns, are prime actors in Polly's wonderful adventures.

POLLY COLOGNE,

For the older young folks there will be

THE STORY OF HONOR BRIGHT

by Magnus Merriweather, author of "A General Misunderstanding," and "Royal Lowrie's Last Year at St. Olaves."

This new story is dedicated to the boys of a certain school, real live boys, who wrote to the author, challenging him to produce a story equal to the two just mentioned. In response, "Honor Bright" has been written, far superior to either, in both interest and influence. In the name of the hero, Honor Bright, lies a great surprise. Mr. Walter Shirlaw, instructor of the Art Students' League, New York, will illustrate this story fully.

Several striking Two-Part Stories will appear during the year: King Philip's Head, by the Editor of the Boston Courier; Tot, the Dwarf, by Margaret Eytinge, with eight drawings by George Foster, etc.

A New Feature, including Cash Prizes, for best original stories, drawings, puzzles, inventions, etc., will be introduced during 1881 (full particulars in January number.)

And after long consideration of what would best meet growing demands, the Editors have decided to add a Special Department for Boys (which the girls are also invited to enjoy), which will be or what the boys (and girls too) wish to know and ought to know of what the great world is doing, saying and thinking. This department will be under the able charge of Edward Everett Hale, whose name alone is guarantee of its certain remarkable interest and practical value.

The publishers also have pleasure in announcing A New Cover, artistic and genuinely American in design and novel in color, which, with entire new type, will add largely to the attractiveness of this popular magazine.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

MACON CENTER.

It may be necessary to explain why we change the caption. Macon is becoming "very numerous." There is Macon, from the name of the Post Office in the north-west corner of the township, which is also known as Pennington's Corners. We also have Lake Ridge, from the name of the post-office on the ridge road, which was formerly quite a point for people to congregate in the varied society gatherings, elections, &c., but the school district thereat has driven all those things away, so that it is not applicable to matters transpiring in this part of the township, still it is retained for events in the vicinity of Lake Ridge hotel, near the north-east corner of the township. All that portion adjacent to the Grange Hall and church near by (being one mile west of the center of the township,) and the south-western part has been known as South Macon, but there has been a new church erected in the south east part of the township, and a Red Ribbon club organized there, which they call South Macon. So it becomes necessary for one or the other to change. Therefore by mutual consent the south-west part and vicinity of Grange hall will be known as Macon Center; the north-west part as Macon; the north-east as Lake Ridge, and the south-east as South Macon.

Cool fall weather—nice time to pull beets and turnips, pit potatoes, pack apples, husk corn, shingle, etc. Average temperature, in morning, for the past two weeks, about zero. Lowest point reached 10° below.

George Grap has returned from his hunting expedition, having captured eight deer.

Lyman Gilmore has purchased the Asa Russell house and lot and is moving his goods.

W. H. Osborne and wife have returned from their eastern visit. They came by the way of Washington and attended the National Grange.

This township is turning out quite a grist of M. D's. Lee Ambrose, H. D. Baker, and N. A. Darling are attending the medical department of the University.

C. R. Henry, Esq., formerly of this township, was elected prosecuting attorney on the republican ticket at the late election in Iosco, (a democratic county,) by a majority of 300.

Willie Stewart, Sarah Hunt, Martha Linton and Nelia Russell are attending the Raisin Valley School; Ada Linn and Maggie Clarkson, the Tecumseh Union School; Fred Miller, Ella Miller and Dewitt Martin, Adrian College.

Three new applications to the Grange, with a prospect of a large class.

The water tank on the Butler road at John Britton's, with appliances, including steam pump, is completed.—The tank is estimated to hold 1,300 barrels. John says they lack $300 of the amount necessary to secure a depot at that point. A very small sum't for the citizens or railroad company to hang fire on. It is one of the best island points on the route, being about midway between Dundee and Tecumseh, and only 1½ miles from Ridgeway village and 2½ miles south of the Ridge road, at the point of Easlick's saw mill, making it available to a large tract of country.

Weh are again the necessity of relating a sad calamity which has befallen the family of J. L. Remington, who has been terribly afflicted during the past year. A little over a year ago Mr. Remington was a victim of the grand stand disaster, and before his final recovery the diphtheria struck this locality, visiting Mr. R.'s family with terrible severity, taking two of its inmates, and last Wednesday morning, about 8 o'clock, their dwelling took fire and burned down with most of its contents. It is not known how the fire originated but is supposed from a chimney burning out. Insurance $1,400. Mr. R. is fortunate in having a small house on the farm in which to winter. He contemplates rebuilding next summer. The family requests us to state that they feel under great obligations to their neighbors and friends for the effort set forth in rescuing their goods from the flames and assisting them in setting up in their new quarters. CLINTON.

Hiram Reynolds is confined to his home from a slight attack of paralysis.

Frank Brown is building an addition to his store in the rear, to be used for bar iron exclusively.

George Freese is at home this week healing up the wounds received from trying to stop a Detroit elevator with his head. Lucky for George that he has the fragment of a head left to patch up.

Prof. W. W. Wendell paid his old friends here a flying visit last Saturday. The Prof. is highly pleased with his school at Hudson.

The Clinton lyceum flourishes. Their next debate will be on the question, "Resolved, That it is unjust to tax the rich to educate the poor."

The tax roll is now in the hands of the Treasurer, and swearing is again in order. The nearer a man has to pay his just proportion of taxes, the louder he snaps and snarls, and the less the supervisor cares.

Mr. William Hanke, a prominent German of Bridgewater was thrown from his wagon Saturday afternoon and received several injuries about the head and face. Dr. A. F. Tuttle dressed his wounds and he was able to be taken home Sunday morning.

SPRINGVILLE.

Wanted—A little snow for sleighing.

The farmers in this section are improving the opportunity the good roads permit of drawing their grain to market.

The ice houses in this vicinity are being filled rapidly, the ice being about 10 inches thick.

The school in Dist. No. 5 was commenced last Monday and will be taught by Miss Allie Reed, it having been closed two weeks ago on account of sickness of the former teacher.

The social party at Ayers Bros'. Hall on Thanksgiving evening was well attended, there being about 30 couples present. The supper was furnished at Smith's Hotel and everything passed off to the satisfaction of all present.

Mr. and Mrs. David Swift of this township celebrated their fiftieth anniversary of their wedding on Friday, Nov. 26, Mr. and Mrs. David Swift are old pioneers of this township, being the earliest settlers. A good company of their friends assembled at their residence with presents which were highly appreciated, of which the following is a list: Eight bushels of wheat, 200 lbs. of flour, 5 loads of wood, 8 bushels of corn, a large quantity of groceries, wearing apparel, bedding, and about $5 in money.

FRANKLIN.

A very pleasant social gathering occured at the residence of Andrew Wilson, on Thanksgiving day. As has been their custom for many years, all the family connections assembled to the number of twenty-one, and to add to the pleasure of the occasion, the children presented Mr. W. and Mrs. W. with a pair of gold spectacles, which of course were praised above their intrinsic value. Your correspondent had the pleasure of calling upon them in the evening, and enjoyed the stay immensely.

Rev. E. P. Peirce is conducting a series of religious meetings at the German school house each evening during this week and perhaps longer.

Prof. Lowrie preached again at the Congregational church last Sabbath, both morning and evening, to large congregations, and so far as we could learn gave universal satisfaction. The society will rent the pews next Tuesday at 1 P. M., with a view of procuring his services as permanent pastor, and it is hoped persons interested will respond liberally.

Our township board have filled the vacancy in the office of Supervisor occasioned by the removal of B. F. Reynolds, to Tecumseh, at least so far as to appoint a successor.

We received a friendly call from S. C. Stacy last Friday. Always glad to see him, and pleased to note the success that attends his unremitting efforts to sustain and constantly improve his valuable paper. May financial success also attend his enterprise.

The National Greenback club will meet on Friday evening. A courteous invitation is extended to all.

Charles and Garrett Powers are about to take up their line of march for Montcalm county.

The friends of John Exelby say that he is now en-route for Michigan.

Some miscreant had the audacity to fire a shot from a revolver through a window of Wm. Andrews' house one evening not long since. A broken pane of glass and a serious fright to Wm. Jr, was the result.

Clarence, a 3-year-old son of G. W. Jackson, fell down a cellar way at W. Wilson's on the 26th, and was badly cut and bruised about the face. When picked up one hand was fast in a steel trap which was set for altogether a different kind of game.

That bureau drawers are not a safe depository for greenbacks was clearly demonstrated to Mrs. Mary Ann Barrett the other day when she looked for $30 that she laid away. This is the second time that a like amount has taken wings from the same place.

Chester Brownson and Miss Wilkins were married on the evening of the 24th ult., at the residence of Geo. Wilkins, in Macon, and he cuts the boys short on any cute thing they might undertake to say by promptly "setting 'em up." Nothing small about Chet, anyway.

Mr. Isaiah Hendershot has organized a singing class here. A meeting was held in the basement of the M. E. church Monday evening for that purpose, and quite a number of our young folks pledged their support.—The reputation of Mr. H. as a teacher ought to insure a good attendance.

ADDISON.

People and politicians have alike settled down to business in this section of country since cold weather set in.

The class in vocal music, organized a short time since, at the Friends' church, is making excellent progress under the management of Mr. Levi Salsbury.

A new and imposing sign marks the business place of Mr. A. A. Roberts on the west side of the creek.

Mr. G. A. Smith, of Somerset has just completed some very valuable improvements to the water passage at the mill dam on Main street.

Edward Cleveland is making quite extensive additions to his saloon building and residence.

Mr. H. S. Van Etten is one of the most enterprising and successful young blacksmiths in the county.—Farmers will find him at the old Morley building.

Reports say that Addison meat dealers have disposed of more stock during the past season than those of any town in the State with so small a population.

The union schools of this place are prospering finely under the care of Mr. and Miss Condict, of Adrian.—Rhetorical exercises are conducted on every alternate Friday P. M. at the school building.

As the leap year time draws to a close Cupid has prepared an unusually numerous exhibit. Messrs. E. S. Lapham and A. J. Kempton, both of this place swell the happy throng.—Scores of others have fallen in line and "Still there's more to follow."

EAST RIDGEWAY.

Fine weather.

Getting out ties is the order of the day.

As Thomas O'Neil and Bert Rose was getting out ties on Geo. L. Oliver's place last Wednesday, Rose partly lost his balance, and throwing his foot backwards received a pretty severe cut from O'Neil's ax in the foot, so he had to be carried out of the woods, and will probably be laid up two or three weeks.

The track of the D. & B. railroad is laid about four miles west of Milan, and we expect soon to hear the whistle of the locomotive here.

James Getty, an old resident of Ridgeway, died Tuesday night, Nov. 23. He was born in the county of Antrim, Ireland, June 19th, 1810, and was 70 years, 5 months and 4 days of age. He came to America in 1851, and settled in New York State, and removed to Michigan in 1854, and settled in Ridgeway on Sec. 36, where he cleared up a farm of eighty acres and lived until about three years ago, when he married his third wife, a widow, living in Deerfield township, where he has since resided. Shortly after retiring for the night he complained of being cold, and being distressed in his stomach. His wife arose, and while kindling the fire he got up, sat down on a chair, complaining of dizziness in the head, and in a few moments fell to the floor dead. NIX.

A NEW PAYING OCCUPATION FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

The handsome Nickel Plated New Home Lamp being introduced to the public this season, is the most meritorious article ever offered Agents to make money with, is safer, and more convenient than the Student Lamp, which has heretofore had the reputation of being the Safest Lamp made, it has a clamp to firmly attach it to the Sewing Machine, Piano, Organ, Desk, etc. The fear of the ordinary lamp being accidentally upset or thrown from the table, is entirely relieved by this simple contrivance. It can be adjusted to throw the light just where it is wanted to suit the eyes, and can be converted into a handsome wall lamp. It has the best argand burner, a filling indicator, and convenient match box, and its price is within the reach of everyone. It has been fully tested and editorially endorsed by the "Western Christian Advocate," "Am. Christian Review," "Herald and Presbyter," "Journal and Messenger," and "Christian Standard," the leading Religious papers of Cincinnati, and is endorsed by the Mayor and Post-Master of Cincinnati, the Agent of the American Express Companies, as being the Safest, Most Convenient and best Lamp made.

There are three reasons why Agents should seek such an article to canvass for—first for its absolute safety and great convenience, it is needed in every home—second its low price makes its sale immense—third it will be a credit to handle such an article. One southern Agent writes, it sells faster than Gen. Lee's portrait sold right after the war, another writes it beats the palmy days of the Sewing Machine, its rapid sale, low price, and liberal terms surprise old Agents.—Address Home Lamp Co., Cincinnati, O. Mentioning our paper and they will give you full particulars and exclusive territory to canvass in.

THE New York Observer is an interesting and valuable family paper. We can recommend it to our readers, who wish to take a New York paper, as pure and safe. The publishers have this year issued a volume of Irenæus letters, with a fine portrait of the author, which they offer to old subscribers. Anyone can get the terms by sending to New York Observer, New York.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

LIFE'S LONGINGS.

Asked ran laughing on the bough,
The sun shone warm and bright
Upon her waving golden hair,
Her lips form smiling.
"I wonder why the world's so fair,
So full of sun and song;
I wonder why the folks don't laugh
And play the whole day long."

A maid was peeping on the shore,
She glanced far out to sea
Where over the mast sailors sang
A lark so gladsomely.
"My love is coming over the waves,
Is coming soon to me,
I wonder why, in this sweet world,
Old folks such a show see."

A woman stood upon the shore,
Her eyes with weeping red,
Looked sadly on the graves
That ne'er g've up its dead.
"I wonder why the world was made
So dark and full of care,
No wonder that life's burden seems
Too great for one to bear."

Near by the window's ledge they saw
A grandfather, old and gray—
The window looking out to sea
Where ships at anchor lay.
I wonder when my eyes shall see
Life's ship at anchor lie,
With a God's harbor peacefully
For all eternity."

PONTIAC, OR THE INDIAN JUDAS.

The officer in command at Detroit in 1763 was a man of singular qualities, yet withal a true Christian.

As an officer, he was brave in battle, stern and fertile in emergencies, rigid in discipline, yet popular with his soldiers; but at the same time so affable as often almost to merge the commandant in the gentleman, so kind as to seem weak, such an admirer of women, and always so richly dressed that it was written of him, "Had he been placed in the same sphere or society he might have been a second Chesterfield."

Toward even squaws he was so courteous that they soon came to regard him in the most friendly spirit, thus enabling him to impress them with many a Christian sentiment. He made it a point to supply them as much as possible with employment in their particular ways, as Indian embroideries, bead work, and buckskin moccasins. Many such things he sent across the sea to his English friends, where they were regarded as great curiosities. In the spring of 1763 the Indians were pinched for food, and many of them came and set up their wigwams near the fort, where, until summer, they might subsist upon the patronage and charity of the garrison. Among others there came with her family a dusky Ottawa maiden named Mee-mi, an adept in every kind of needle work known to the squaws. Major Gladwin soon heard of her and her unusual skill, and sent for her to come into the fort, as he had an elk skin for her to make up into moccasins. When she came he found her rightly named Mee-mi, which signifies wild pigeon, as she was peculiarly delicate and timid for a squaw.

Making known to her, by the interpreter, his want of moccasins, he gave her the elk skin, from which in a few days, she produced a quaint and beautiful pair. So delighted was he with her work that he kept her fingers busy all the spring in one device and another, meantime showing her such courtesies, making her so many presents, and paying such liberal prices as to quite win her confidence. To gentle Mee-mi there was no one like the good officer, so brave and refined, and yet so smiling and generous. He was so different from her father and other warriors, who, with their courage and kingly stature, combined rude manners and often rough words. As events proved, the innocent girl's gratitude and regard toward him prompted her to do a noble deed in his behalf.

In the summer, while the corn was growing in the Indian's fields, and the game was increasing and fattening in the woods, a motley crowd of men, women and children from the neighboring tribes, Ottawas chiefly, gathered in the vicinity of the fort for the purpose of bartering away to the soldiers the trinkets which they had manufactured in their wigwams during the winter and spring. They were attended by the celebrated Pontiac a great chieftain, sometimes even styled an emperor, and all their manners and associations seemed friendly in the utmost degree. Some days of pleasant trading passed, and at length their relations were so agreeable that Pontiac proposed to the commandant of the fort a council for the purpose of "brightening the chain of peace."

Major Gladwin readily assented without a suspicion of harm, and it was arranged that the calumet should be smoked the next morning inside the fort. To show his peaceful intentions, Pontiac stipulated to bring with him 200 unarmed warriors, thus making a most imposing display.

During the previous day, the fort was put in order for the council the next morning. In the afternoon timid Mee-mi made her appearance with some uncommonly fine needle work for the Major; but she was strangely reserved considering how familiar she had become of late. After a brief attempt to learn the cause of her changed manners, he dismissed her with a fine elk skin which he wished her to manufacture into moccasins and purses for certain of his friends.

As the gates were being shut that night, the officer of the guard found Mee-mi still inside the walls, and weeping as if in great sorrow. At being ordered out, her distress was sharply increased, and she refused to go. Hereupon, the officer led her away to the commandant's quarters, and reported the facts to him. Now the girl showed still greater emotion, but gave as her reason for remaining within the fort that she did not like to carry away the skin because the Major set so high a value upon it. But this answer was so poor and unsatisfactory that it only made him suspicious of something of serious importance. He therefore urged her to tell what was in her mind. Finally she replied with sobs that if she told what she knew, Pontiac would kill her. At this the commandant redoubled his efforts to induce her to confide her trouble to him, promising to stand between her and all harm, even from Pontiac. It is no wonder, however, that a timid girl should greatly hesitate to do anything to incur the vengeance of so mighty a chief as Pontiac.

At length Major Gladwin prevailed, and she stated that a plot was formed to murder him and the other officers at the council, in the morning, and then slaughter the garrison, and take possession of the fort.

"Even now," said she, in her rolling Indian language, "they are cutting off their gun barrels so that they can hide them beneath their blankets. And when the great chief draws the peace belt of wampum during his speech, the warriors will take the scalps of my good officer and all his men."

And then the poor girl's grief burst forth anew, sitting down on the floor of the quarters, she began to swing back and forth and utter that doleful note always expressive of a squaw's greatest sorrow: "Wahono win! Wahono win!"

When she became calm again, and the interpreter was enabled to learn the whole plot, it appeared that the savages were actually intending to come to the council fully armed, every weapon concealed under their blankets; and at a concerted signal from Pontiac, they would begin a massacre which would only stop when the last of the garrison was dead. A thousand warriors were to wait outside the gates ready to enter when those within should open to them at the beginning of the fray.

What a Judas was Pontiac, and how worse than a demon's kiss was to be that signal of the peace belt which would begin the carnage? But "forewarned is forearmed," and Major Gladwin proved equal to the occasion.

The night was spent in stern preparation for the morning's event. The soldiers were informed of the plot, and every man enjoined to put his musket in perfect order, load it carefully and pick the flint, and fill his cartridge box with ammunition. Several cannon were posted so as to command the council house, and when supplied with ammunition were covered with sail cloth to hide them from view. Certain weak places in the stockade were quietly repaired. And, in short, everything possible was done in order to give a fitting reception to Pontiac and his blood-thirsty band.

Promptly at ten o'clock the Indians appeared at the gate ready for their treacherous work. The stipulated two hundred warriors were counted off and marched in, apparently unarmed, although it must be confessed that for a warm July morning their extreme care in holding their heavy blankets snugly about them seemed rather ridiculous.

When they had all entered, the gates were not only snugly closed, but certain ingenious fastenings applied which no Indian could readily loosen or break. Thus it appeared as if whatever slaughter of the troops they might undertake the two hundred must have it out, unaided by the savages the other side of the wall.

Within, Pontiac noticed the garrison under arms and posted in battle order around the council house, and upon asking the reason was told that it was designed as a mark of honor to him and the distinguished chiefs attending him. Whether the wily old sachem mistrusted the real cause his stoical face gave no token.

The council house was simply a wide roof supported on posts, without side walls, so that when the Indians had stationed themselves according to their ideas of rank they were in plain view of the preparations and precautions that Major Gladwin had effected.

After a few of the highest chiefs and some of the officers had puffed the pipe of peace, Pontiac began his speech, in the course of which the grand catastrophe was to occur. To say that every white man in the fort was suppressing a furnace of excitement would not convey the intensity of the hour. Around the speaker's waist was the wampum belt, designed to introduce the carnage, while under many a warrior's blanket the ill concealed shapes and corners of weapons were discernible.

But Pontiac and his band could not have felt at ease under the circumstances. The cannon had been uncovered, and the gunners stood with burning fuses; every soldier was in position to discharge his musket at a second's warning, while the savages, encumbered with blankets, and crowded together, were placed at a serious disadvantage.

The speech proceeded, and at the point where the wampum was to be passed to Major Gladwin as the signal for the fight, each officer drew his sword, each soldier raised his gun to his shoulder to fire, and each gunner at the cannon stepped forward for his fearful duty.

But these movements showed the Indians that they were detected. Pontiac stammered and trembled, every chief flinched, and many exclaimed, and for once these stoics of the forest were unnerved.

But here Pontiac's consummate subtlety came to his help. He neatly avoided the concerted sign, and closing his speech with words of the warmest regard for the whites, gave way for Major Gladwin's reply.

And now the polite and kind souled commandant showed himself master of the situation. He directly and loudly charged Pontiac with his treachery, and taunted him with the crime and failure of his diabolical plot.

When the old chief denied, and pretended there was no plot, and that his warriors were actually unarmed as he had promised, Gladwin drew his sword, and gallantly marching down the line of savages, pulled aside many of their blankets, and revealed the shortened guns, tomahawks and scalping knives. At this the red skin's confusion knew no bounds. But words are inadequate to describe the scene; the reader must picture it for himself.

Just here appears the superiority in noble and humane qualities of civilized man over the barbarian, for instead of taking away their arms, and imprisoning the whole band, or opening the great guns upon them, Major Gladwin mercifully ordered them from the fort, though it must be acknowledged that he did it with vehemence of words and vigor of action that could not have been very flattering to the pride of a pompous Indian emperor like Pontiac.

LOST TREASURE.—Treasure hunters in Hayti are very desirous of finding about $30,000,000 buried by Toussaint L'Ouverture, when he surrendered to the French in 1790. He caused the coin to be put in sacks and carried to a place near Port au Prince in three wagons, guarded by ten soldiers. He ordered ten men to dig the hole for their reception, and, after covering them, to return immediately with the wagons and escort. After the work had been accomplished the party returned, but were fired on from an ambush by a batallion under the command of Toussaint himself. All were killed, and the secret of the treasure's location was lost with Toussaint's death.

A bird sitting on a telegraph wire is not harmed by passing currents of electricity, as is generally supposed. Birds are often killed by coming in contact with the wires when flying.

Snake Charming.

In India the favorite snake for exhibition is the cobra, partly because of its more striking appearance, and partly because, its deadly character being so well known, any trifling with it appears to the unitiated public the more wonderful. Nor, indeed, do the performances of the Hindoo snake-charmers lose, on better acquaintance, all their marvelousness, for courage of a high order, arising partly from the confidence acquired by long practice, is manifested in seizing and bagging the dreadful ophidian.

In most cases the charmer renders the reptiles harmless by drawing their poison fangs, and the exhibition becomes then merely one of the snake's highly trained condition. On the other hand it happens that the basket contains the veritable death-dealer, and a cobra with its fangs undrawn is nearly always forthcoming if the temptation in money be sufficiently strong. But in handling of the creature when once exposed there is no hesitation, for hesitation means death, and in the swift seizure and sudden release there is daring of an exceptional kind. A cobra strikes, when it has really made up its mind to strike, with lightning rapidity, and to dodge lightning successfully requires considerable agility.

The snake-charmers, however, when put on their mettle, will grasp the erect cobra with impunity, owing solely to the superior speed of their movements, for by feint they provoke the reptile to strike, and before it can recover its attitude seize it below the jaws. In the same way the ichneumon or mongoose secures in contest with venomous snakes a comparative immunity. It was for a long time an article of faith with writers of popular works on natural history, that this animal enjoyed a complete immunity, but scientific experiment has corrected this fallacy. A mongoose and cobra confined together fought freely, and though the latter seemed to the eye to strike his antagonist repeatedly, the mongoose, on being examined after killing the snake, was found to be untouched.

Another cobra was then brought on to the scene, and being made to close its fangs on the mongoose's leg, the animal confessed its susceptibility to the poison by dying in about four minutes. It was therefore by its superior activity alone that in a fair fight with the reptile it had escaped unhurt and to the same cause the snake charmer owes the immunity that attends his exhibition. But, as in the case of the mongoose, the snake charmer when actually bitten dies as soon as any other creature, and in spite of all the powers of his charms, roots and snake stones. The Hindoo spectator refuses to believe this, and enjoys, therefore, by his credulity, a pleasure denied to more intelligent audiences, for if we could only accept as truth the charmer's statement that he has really been bitten, and that the red drops on the bitten spot were actually blood exuding from the fatal puncture, and could then believe that the root he smelt, the stones he applied to the wound, and the charms he muttered were veritably counteracting the magic of the cobra's poison, the spectacle would be of surpassing interest, since it would be a miracle.

For the cobra's bite there is no remedy except instant amputation, and the snake charmer himself knows this well. As a means of general security he confides in his dextrous slight of hand, but in cases of accident he carries a broad-bladed knife.

The Romance of Death.

It is not a little singular that the Greeks have scarcely ever failed to make the deaths of their literary heroes as marvelous as their lives. Homer, they tell us, died of a broken heart, because he could not guess a riddle. As Horace had been warned by a witch that a chatterbox would be his death, so had Homer been warned by an oracle that he would be killed by a riddle. And his day came. Seeing, or rather hearing, for the tradition of his blindness is too universal to be discredited—some young fishermen in a boat, he unfortunately asked them what sport they had had. They replied: "As many as we caught we left as many as we could not catch we carried with us."

This was too much for the author of the Iliad. He guessed and guessed, till he could guess no longer, and finally died of sheer vexation. According to Gregory Nazianzen, Justin Martyr, and Eustathius, Aristotle went off in precisely the same way, because he could not understand a more interesting riddle set by nature, namely, the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the Euripus. "Since," he indignantly exclaimed, "I can not conceive the Euripus, let the Euripus receive me!" Diodorous, the ingenious inventor of the "horned" and "veiled" sophism, having met with his match in one Stilpo, who "caught" him with another sophism, which he was unable to solve, went home, wrote a book about it, and died of despair.

Though the Earth be Removed.

The traveler Humboldt gives an interesting account of the first earthquake he witnessed. It was at Cumana, in South America. The first shock came after a strange stillness. It caused an earthquake in his mind, for it overthrew in a moment all his life long notions about the safety of the earth. The crocodiles ran from the river Orinoco, howling into the woods, the dogs and pigs were powerless with fear. The whole city seemed "the hearth of destruction." The houses could not shelter, for they were falling in ruins. He turned to the trees, but they were overthrown. His next thought was to run to the mountains, but they reeled like drunken men. He then looked toward the sea. Lo! it had fled; and the ships, which a few minutes before were in deep water, rocked on the bare sand. He tells us that being then at his wit's end, he looked up and observed that heaven alone was calm and unshaken. Many strange things are yet to come upon the world—earthquakes, overturnings, upheavings. But amid them all, the Book tells us, the Christian shall look up to the heavenly one, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," and to his heavenly home which cannot be moved.

OUR LOT.—We know not what evils we have been preserved from; for dazzling prospects do not always bring the cheer and comfort we expect, and promise of future good often results in disappointment and sorrow. There are blessings and privileges in every life; let us be thankful for all those which fall to our lot.

If you would pass for more than your value, say little. It is easier to look wise than to talk wise.

A WOMAN'S DRESS.

Bob Burdette, in the course of an article in the Burlington Hawkeye on the rights and wrongs of women says: Our wife wants a dress. After two or three or half a dozen stores have been ransacked for goods, the dressmaker is sought out. The matter of measurement is tedious, and then the matter of fitting is one of numerous and repeated trials. Finally the dress is finished and sent home. Then it is sent back to be taken in here and let out there, and at last, after the customer has been fitted more times for that one dress than her husband has been measured for three or four years, the dress comes home for the last time and is pronounced by the wearer, her friends, and the dressmaker as a beautiful and perfect fit, and is finished.

Beautiful it certainly is, far more beautiful than anything her husband ever wears. Colors and materials, style, blending shades and contrasting bits of color, are all in the perfection of good taste. No man can improve upon that. But it isn't finished. When it is completed as far as the skill of the dressmaker can finish it, and it is put on, it has to be pinned.—Somewhere; sometimes in two or three, often in half a dozen places. It always requires a pin. Leave out the pin and the dress is all awry somewhere. On all this broad continent there is not one American woman who can dress so as to make any kind of an appearance in good society without pins.

Now, suppose our tailor should send our suit home, and when we had put on the coat we had to pin it at the back? Or suppose there was no suspender buttons aft, and we had to use pins there? Suppose he made our shirts so we would have to pin on the collar—how long would such a shirt or such a suit of clothes stay in the house? Who would be responsible for the language used by the man who had to pin his coat? No tailor would dare to so tempt the wrath of an independent man. But woman—alas, she patiently pins on the dress that she paid some one $30 or $40 to make, and does not think anything about it. We will not pursue this painful subject. Let the women of America take it up, and think about it, and learn in the noble independence of womanhood, to make their clothes before they put them on.

The protection it affords by its timely use on Rheumatism, kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co's. and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Ancient Egypt had a high civilization, and it exhibited itself in the wisdom with which the insane were treated. At each extremity of Egypt was built a temple to Saturn, where lunatics of various degrees were bro't by their friends. The temples were surrounded by beautiful shady grounds, and patients were provided with every form of amusement and recreation that would occupy the mind and invigorate the body. Here, also, the finest works of art were brought. Music, wine, employment, fixing the attention and exercising the memory, were the principle remedies used, and none but the most violent maniacs were put under any personal restraint.

Adrian Times: This morning the order books and other property stolen from the office of the superintendent of the poor were found piled up in the hallway leading to their office. The books do not appear to have been tampered with, and the object of the thief in returning them is as great a conundrum as his motive in lugging them off.

The Sword-Fish.

Visitors at New London, Block Island or other of our fishing ports have no doubt noticed that at the end of the bowsprit of the large-sized fishing boats there is often an iron cage or frame, so made as to be safe for a man to stand on it. This is the place from which the fisherman throws the harpoon to capture the sword-fish, and the sword-fish is just now the subject of considerable discussion. Its ways have at least as much mystery as those of the shad, salmon, herring or any other unaccountables that we have. Professor G. R. Goode is studying up the matter, preparatory to a report to the government. Some of the interesting features of the fish are these: It is found here and there from spring to fall in the ocean on our coast, lying "asleep," the sailors call it, on the very surface of the water. No body on the American coast, so far as reported, ever saw a little sword-fish. The smallest, recorded by a correspondent, weighed forty-six pounds. They run up to six hundred pounds. Their only known breeding place is in the Mediterranean. There the same fish are found weighing half a pound; from that they go up to very heavy measurement. It is naturally inferred from this that all our sword-fish are Mediterranean products. What mysterious ocean current guides them over here? Or is it an instinct that teaches them that here they will find the mackerel and menhaden that they feed on? One can almost imagine that the game of flight and pursuit kept up by these two species starts at Gibraltar, and is run to Block Island every day.

The sword-fish darts upon a school of its prey, and by skillful use of its sword wounds those that it afterwards captures and eats. Until this season nobody ever thought of catching it except by harpoons. This year, however, it has taken the baits of the trawls—bottom lines—of the Cape Ann codfishermen, and many sword-fish have been caught in this novel way.

What they come up and "sleep" for is one of the puzzles of their nature. They come and go as the mackerel and menhaden do, and from that it is naturally concluded that they spend their time chasing these small fish. What with sharks, sword-fish, porpoises, blue-fish, sea-gulls, eagles and scimes, and all the rest of them, the fish of the herring tribe have led such lives of fright and terror that it is no longer a wonder that the movements of any school of them seem always guided by an inherent idiocy. It is less strange of them that they are all the while victims than that being caught by millions yearly, they should steadily increase. There were never more menhaden on our coast than this year.

There is a dark and also a bright side to every providence, as there was to the fiery, cloudy pillar that guided God's people of old in the desert. Nature looks on the dark side, and calls it sorrow and sadness; but faith sees the sun dispersing the darkness, and calls it by the name of joy.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 2, 1880.

THE HERALD FOR 1881.

Thirty years ago on the 25th day of May last the initial number of the TECUMSEH HERALD greeted its patrons. Through all the succeeding years, it has sent its weekly message among the homes of Northern Lenawee, and exerted its humble influence for the business up-building of this portion of the Master's vineyard. Like all human undertakings it has had its ups and downs in life; it has been buffetted by the storms of adversity, and has basked in the sunshine of prosperity. But the days of uncertainty in the HERALD'S history have passed. It has become one of the fixed institutions of this community. It has come to stay.

Improvement and progress are the watchwords of the present age. The whole country is feeling the hilarious effects of a grand business boom, and the newspaper fraternity, being among the first to feel the quickening impulse, are extending their lines, advancing their outposts, making new conquests and gaining new victories. In making the local history of this section of Michigan during the coming twelve months, the HERALD will occupy its accustomed position in the front rank. It has already achieved the distinction of being the best local newspaper in Lenawee county, and it will be a better local family paper during the year 1881 than it has ever been hitherto.

ITS CHARACTER.

A word in regard to its general character.

The HERALD has never been and never claimed to be a neutral paper.—It has always been—since the present owner conducted it—an independent paper, and such it will continue to be. The HERALD will be the organ of no party, sect or clique; but it must not be supposed that it will have no opinions of its own. We shall freely express our views on all topics, whether of a political, religious, social, temperance or general character.

While we shall endeavor to eschew all mere partisan debate in politics, we shall devote more attention and space than heretofore to the discussion of free trade and the tariff, of civil service reform, of revenue reform, of currency and trade, and all those economical and financial questions which are pressing themselves upon the people for solution. Party lines are fading away. People are looking more to principles and less to names. The voters of all parties are ready to discard "machine" politics, and to enlighten themselves upon those great questions of governmental policy on which parties must divide in the near future.

As a local family newspaper the HERALD will continue to be the leading organ in the towns of Northern Lenawee. It will be a faithful mirror of the social and business life of this vicinity.

ITS SPECIAL FEATURES.

1. A full assortment of local news from its regular township and neighborhood correspondents.
2. A good story and other reading matter for the "Family Circle."
3. A department of "County News" gleaned from the county press.
4. A carefully edited department of "State News."
5. An original "Washington Letter" during each session of Congress.
6. A "Farmers' Page," which will be devoted to general agricultural news and the reports of all farmers' clubs within our jurisdiction.
7. A column of extracts each week from the leading independent and party newspapers.
8. A live local department, devoted specially to Tecumseh news, supplemented with an illustrated corner each week.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Our subscription rates for 1881 will be $1.50 per year, cash in advance.

PREMIUMS.

To each new subscriber receiving his paper at a post office in Lenawee county, who shall pay cash in advance for one year, we will give a premium receipt book, entitled "The Home Guide." This is one of the best family receipt books ever published, and is worth at retail fifty cents. Subscribers sending in their names at once will be credited to Jan. 1, 1882. They will get the remaining numbers for December free. Old subscribers will receive the "Home Guide" on the same terms as new ones, upon the payment of all arrears up to the present time.

The HERALD for one year, and Page's Map of Michigan, will be furnished for $2.00. The retail price of the map alone is $2.00.

The HERALD for one year, and Webster's Pictorial Dictionary, will be furnished for $5.00, which is the price of the Dictionary alone.

These premiums will all be withdrawn on the first day of February next.

Such are the features of our campaign for 1881. It will be short, sharp, and decisive, lasting only two months—during December and January. We confidently expect to add three hundred new names to our list within that time, and if the fates shall be as generous toward us in the future as they have been in the past we shall certainly reach the desired goal.

WHAT A COMPETING RAILROAD DOES.

The amount necessary to release the Adrian car shops from all incumbrance has been subscribed, the notes have been passed over to M. S. Smith, of Detroit, and the title to the property has been passed into the hands of a new company. The works will be overhauled at once, new machinery put in, and new cars will be running out of the shop inside of sixty days.—And this result never would have been accomplished but for the fact that the Detroit and Butler railroad was assured. We learn also that a new steam flouring will soon be erected in Adrian; another business enterprise which will owe its existence to the new competing railroad. Real estate has risen in value in that city fully twenty per cent. during the past six months.—The late E. L. Clark's donation to the Butler road was $10,000, and it is estimated by good judges that the additional value of the real estate owned by him would already amount to more than that sum.

We have a striking illustration in the opposite direction, here at home. Wm. Hayden has had twenty car loads of flour stored in his warehouse for the past thirty days awaiting shipment, and which could not be shipped because the Lake Shore company could not furnish the cars. During this time the rates have advanced five cents per barrel, and this advance will subject Mr. Hayden to a loss on the flour on hand of over $300, as the flour has been sold for more than a month. He has now over 17,000 bushels of wheat in his mill and will soon be obliged to stop buying for lack of storage room. This is not only a great damage to Mr. Hayden but indirectly to the farmers who market their wheat in Tecumseh. In fact the farmers living within ten miles of Tecumseh, and especially those near both the Adrian and Tecumseh markets are doubly interested at present in having Tecumseh secure a competing road.—Adrian already has one. Now if Tecumseh can secure one also, it will keep the natural business rivalry that exists between these two towns in a healthy condition, and will result in the very highest advantage to all the farmers who naturally seek either Adrian or Tecumseh for a market. Do the farmers of Franklin and Ridgeway see it? The farmers of Raisin have recognized this fact long ago and have acted accordingly.

These substantial benefits of a competing railroad are commended to a few of our wealthy men, who refused to aid us last spring in our canvass for the Toledo & Milwaukee road. The building of this road is among the possibilities of the next twelve months, but whether Tecumseh will secure it or not is very problematical. Of course, if the road shall never be built, our dilatoriness will make no difference. But if it should be constructed to the west of us, and Tecumseh be left out in the cold, the half dozen wealthy men of this village, who will be responsible for that calamity, may discover in time that when they cripple the business of their own town they also seriously injure themselves.

The pension fund which is raising for the support of ex-presidents has been increased lately to nearly the proposed amount, $250,000. The present intentions of the managers of the enterprise are that General Grant shall receive the accrued interest as long as he lives. Then President Hayes or some other one will be thus supported.

Congressman Conger and Judge Cooley, of this state, have both been mentioned in connection with a Cabinet position under President Garfield. Either of these gentlemen would take a cabinet portfolio with credit, that is if there should be any room left after Ohio has been properly provided for.

To our rural readers, we call attention to the advertisement of The Agricultural World and Michigan Homestead, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, in this issue of our paper, and recommend it as an earnest advocate of improvement of both mind and the soil, and one of the most valuable agricultural papers on our exchange list.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

No Reason For Fear.

New York Tribune, (Rep.): Nobody seems to fear that a failure to provide for ex-Presidents will cause a scarcity of Presidential candidates hereafter. The country is crowded with statesmen who are willing to take the chances of starving after they get out of office.

It Certainly Ought To.

Detroit Free Press, (Dem.): Canada is suffering from a dearth of small change, and the merchants are resorting to the expedients, with which the people of the United States disgusted themselves, less than a score of years ago, of using postage stamps and private shinplasters. It would seem as if the Canadian government might serve the people in this emergency. It doesn't do a great deal for them in any other way, and it might at least supply them with small change.

A False Alarm.

Cincinnati Enquirer, (Dem.): The report, current among Republicans immediately after the election, that the Democratic party was dead turns out to be a false alarm. The Republicans themselves now concede that they can detect a wriggle, and the Democrats are beginning to feel as active as acrobats.

A Funny Account.

New York Sun, (Ind.): Mr. Marshall Jewell may have some money; but he is not credited with too much wit.

Still, for once, Mr. Jewell might appear as a funny man. Let him print a list of the political promises he has made, and a transcript of all his political correspondence during the recent campaign, and his book would sell equal to the sale of Lord Beaconsfield's.

The account would be very funny. Will Mr. Jewell bring it out?

He might make his fortune out of it.

A Tax That Should Be Abolished.

New York World, (Dem.): Cold weather and short days bringing an increased consumption of gas and coal in households and business places suggest on the threshold of another Congressional session that it is time to drop the war-tax upon lucifer matches. Such a tax made Robert Lowe ridiculous once in England, but in this country it produces about $300,000 a month; according to the latest revenue returns, this large amount accruing from the one-cent stamp which every purchaser of a box of matches finds affixed across the cover. This one cent tax must be paid on each package of 100 matches or less, so that on small boxes made to be carried in the pocket the tax just about equals the cost of the matches.

A Chance for Garfield.

Philadelphia Times, (Ind.): General Garfield got started a little on the subject of civil service reform yesterday, and in fewer words than he ordinarily uses to express himself said substantially what has often been said by others. He thinks that those in the service of the country should have their tenure of office placed above the chances and changes of party, and in all that he is right. But General Garfield knows enough about such matters to know that it is easier to talk about reform than it is to accomplish it. Party platforms on both sides have been full of civil service reform for years and party candidates have talked it, but none of the Presidents have accomplished anything. The President whom General Garfield will succeed has presented an illustrious example of what talk, even when supported by good intentions, cannot accomplish. The platform upon which Mr. Hayes was placed and his letter of acceptance were full of demands for civil service reform, but when he began his administration with some orders on the subject he found all the politicians surprised and disgusted that he was innocent enough to regard the pledges in this direction as binding. Like many stronger men, President Hayes was dragged under by the politicians, and civil service reform became more than ever a burlesque.

A Little West Point Talk.

The Nation, (Ind.): Some stalwart papers are angry because we have appeared to share in General Schofield's apprehension that the standards at West Point would be lowered in order to help colored boys to get through. Now, we assert that it is literally true that the standards have been lowered by some form of indulgence in order to help the eleven colored cadets to graduate, and that Whittaker, too, has enjoyed favors which would not have been accorded to a white boy. Since he left the academy a petition has already been signed by ministers and others in this city asking the President to put him back, although his inability to pass the examination has been fully ascertained. This has all grown out of the anxiety of the Republican party to have the negro justify the sacrifices made on his behalf and the expectations excited about him. The motive is praiseworthy, but the means resorted to are not defensible. The Government has no right, either at West Point or anywhere else, to mix philanthropy with business.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

Washington, Nov. 28, 1880.

It is so near to the assembling of Congress that the probable business of the session is a leading topic. Quite a number of Congressmen are here but the majority have lingered at home to spend Thanksgiving with their families. Within a week the hotels, the committee rooms and other Congressional haunts, will look more like business. Among the members now here there is some division of opinion as to what the session will bring forth, but the prevailing judgment is that very little miscellaneous legislation will be effected. The House calendar contains ninety-one pages of measures that have come over from the last session. Each member will be anxious to get his particular measure through, and the result will be a sort of "dog in the manger" policy. That is to say, if the gentleman from somewhere can't get his bill for a public building, or a pension or other claim through, for his constituents, he will object to to the gentleman from somewhere else being favored. The only way that any number of bills ever get through at a short session is by unanimous consent, for it would be a matter of physical impossibility to take up the calendar and go through the business in regular order. The private calendar alone covers over fifty pages, embracing a thousand bills. Each one gives rise to more or less discussion, and the calendar could not be intelligently disposed of if the whole time was devoted to it. Bills of a general nature occupy still more time, and there are scores of them already reported.—Hence, the belief is growing that very little will be done other than the consideration of the appropriation bills. Revenue bills may be discussed, but there is very little hope expressed of their passage, as there are too many conflicting interests involved. The Republican members as a rule express themselves as opposed to any tariff legislation at this session.

It is understood that Secretary Schurz and Commissioner of Pensions Bentley are to come before Congress with a strong appeal for some modifications and improvements in our pension system. The Commissioner's annual report already prepared is an interesting exhibit of the amount of money paid as pensions, and the number of recipients thereof, but the most important branch of it relates to the mass of unadjusted cases pending before the office and the difficulties involved in determining upon them. There are 250,000 names now on the roll to whom the aggregate annual payment is $25,917,906.60, or an average of $103.34 each. But there are 300,000 applications still undecided, many of the cases being equally as just, perhaps, as any already allowed. The difficulty, from Mr. Bentley's standpoint, is to ascertain the real merits of the cases and prevent fraud, the immense labors of these investigations being too much for the capacity of his establishment. He has a bill pending in the Senate which he hopes will be passed at this session. It provides for the appointment of a commission, consisting of one lawyer and one surgeon of reputed ability, whose duty it shall be to visit several times every year the county seats in the Congressional district for which they are appointed, and take the testimony of witnesses and hear the claim of the person asking for a pension, in a public manner. Another merit which the Commissioner claims for his bill is that the burden of delay will rest wholly with the claimant, whose interest would dictate that he must have his evidence and witnesses ready when the Commission meets to hear his claim, and upon whom the burden of proof alone rests. The scope of the bill is, in fact, to divide the labor of the Pension Office among 200 commissions, or as many as are necessary, which are to ascertain in the vicinage of the applicant whether his claim is well established. Others interested in pension matters and familiar with the subject find objections to this bill, of which I shall give you more hereafter. At any rate, all agree that this question is one of the most important to be considered by Congress this winter.

President elect Garfield arrived in the city Tuesday evening and went quietly to his residence without any demonstration whatever. The reception and serenade proposed by the various Republican organizations here was declined. The visit is one of business and perhaps by the time this is in print the object of so much solicitude will have returned to Ohio.

The weather has been exceedingly cold here for some days—about the coldest I have known during a five years residence at the capitol. It is a regular freeze-out, without the redeeming feature of snow and sleighing.

THESE are the days when the man of the house looks forward into the future with sorry and baleful thoughts. Although the holidays have pleasures awaiting for others, they hold out for him nothing but unsigned tax receipts and empty wallets.

Detroit Evening News: Tecumseh croquet players and the village dads are quarreling as to who owns the old cemetery where a public ground has been established for playing Tecumseh's favorite game. The players contend that dead men tell no tales, and can't be worried to death either.

WEDNESDAY night as Mrs. John Aten and Mrs. Briggs were passing over the railroad track near S. W. Temple's yards the horse caught its foot between the rail and plank of the crossing. The horse was going at such a rate that it was thrown over and the two ladies fell, one of them over the dash board and the other out of the side. Mrs. Aten who fell over the dash board was thrown partly under the horse, injuring her chest and face. Mrs. Briggs' chest was hurt, but otherwise uninjured. Both ladies escaped luckily but the horse was quite seriously injured.

MATRIMONIAL.

Last night occurred the marriage of Mr. Charles Sumner Fitzsimmons and Miss Della Dingman, of Tecumseh, which took place at the residence of the bride's brother, A. S. Dingman, in Lansing. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. Grandy, assisted by Rev. W. R. Spencer, before a gathering of their friends. The bride was dressed in an elegant satin with a helitrope tint. Both bride and bridegroom have many friends in this vicinity; the former is a daughter of Mr. W. R. Dingman, till a few years since, when he removed to Lansing, a highly respected citizen of Tecumseh; the latter is a graduate of the public schools of this place and a deserving young man, a nephew of Col. Fitzsimmons. The couple will make Tecumseh their future home.

The presents were varied and elegant, consisting of silverware, fine needle work, vases and many useful articles, being presented by friends from Adrian, Lansing and Tecumseh.

SURPRISE PARTY.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Crosby were greeted with a genuine surprise, on Monday evening at their home in Brownville. About forty of their Methodist friends congregated at Salmon Haight's, and then proceeded to carry out their plans. When they reached the house they found Mrs. Crosby alone, her husband having gone up town. It made no difference, the house was taken posession of and all were enjoying themselves finely when the husband arrived and soon concluded to join in the festivities.

The evening passed away, very pleasantly and the hour of parting came. The closing exercises began by singing "shall we gather at the river." Prayer was offered by the Pastor, a short address was made and gifts were presented. A purse was made up and presented to Mrs. Crosby as a token of appreciation of the beautiful flowers furnished by her for church decorations. The affair afforded much amusement and enjoyment for all parties concerned.

JAPANESE WONDERS.

If there was nothing else to mark the skill, genius and artistic workmanship of the Japanese, the great bronze statue of Dia Bootes would be sufficient to make their name imperishable. Dia Bootes would be worthy of a place among the wonders of the world, equally so with the Colossus of Rhodes, Cleopatra's Needle or the Sphynx of Egypt. This sacred image was not only built of bronze, but the joints were so exact in their fit that they were barely perceptible to the closest observer. Its base rested on a dais of masonry about 5 feet in height. The elevation of the body was 5 jios or 50 feet; between the edge of the hair of the head and the legs crossed, 42 feet; from knee to knee, seated cross-legged, 30 feet, and the circumferance of the body was 98 feet. The following were the minor dimensions: Face, 8½ feet long; circular spot on forehead, 1½ feet in circumferance; eyes, 4 feet long; eyebrows, four feet two and a half inches; ears six feet seven inches; nose, three feet nine inches vertical and two feet four inches horizontal measurement; mouth, four feet three and a half inches wide: shaved portion of head on top called kik kokee, two feet four inches in diameter. The spirally curled locks of hair on the head were nine and a half inches wide and 830 in number; each thumb measured three feet in circumference; these figures will convey some idea of the dimensions, if not the magnificence, of this almost superhuman exhibition of Japanese art. The interior of the statue formed a beautiful temple, in which were gilded images of Buddhist saints, with croziers and glories and other appropriate objects of worship or reverence. In front and at the feet of the statue was an altar, on which were incense pots and urns, to receive the votive offerings of visitors attracted there by sentiment of religious fervor or curiosity. Near by was a residence of the priestly custodians of the sacred place. Here also were pictures of the prophet, and refreshing potations of tea were purchasable at low rates. The scenic effects of the immediate surroundings of the place were in keeping with the statue. The back ground consisted of a mass of green and towering trees, the broad way leading up was raised at regular intervals by small steps, and on either side, growing in all the luxurisance of the country, were azalas flowering plants. The magnificent statue itself out of this scene of beauty rose in all its magnitude and symmetry of proportions. Before it at a short distance, could be seen the rolling indigo-blue of the waves of the ocean. The ancient magnificence of Kamakura was attested by the numerous ruins which strew the plains. Here are hundreds of temples and shrines; the Hachiman-gin (temple of Hachiman) a deified hero of the bushi (military class; several iori (stone portals), supposed to have been the remains of some sacred vestibule; the Aka-bash (Red Bridge); Niwoomon (gate of two kings); a belfry (shinoo), in which a large bronze bell, made to resound on religious occasions by striking with a piece of timber swung on ropes. In this temple, said to have been the oldest in the empire, was the famous stone resorted to by the feminine part of the Mikado's subjects for the property of curing barrenness. It had from time immemorial been visited for the purposes in view. This extraordinary stone was a boulder about four feet in length, railed in so as to prevent too ardent a rush for its offices, and near the stone an urn for the offerings of the devout and credulous. In the rear, reached by a long flight of steps, was a small temple, in which the renowned Taiko-samo, the first of the Shiogoons, worshiped the divinities of his country.

There are many mean men in this world. An Indiana man stopped his paper and said in the presence of a crowd that he'd never read the sheet again, or circulate it; and the fiendish editor went the next day and printed an article speaking very highly of that man as a prominent citizen. And of course the man couldn't go back on his word and read the article, and he nearly went as wild as he would if they had taken liquor away from him.

Just as the carriage was across the bridge the team struck it, and in less time than one could tell it, the carriage was torn to pieces and the occupants thrown to the ground. The runaway team was caught in the buggy, and one of the horses fell in such a position that it had to be removed before Mrs. Slayton could be released.—Both the ladies were considerably bruised, Mrs. Slayton receiving the worst injuries. TESTIMONY

Of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1876.

DR. S. D. HOWE,

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1875, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

WHY WE PLOW CORN STALKS DOWN.

All practical farmers agree that the more we return to the soil of that which grew from it, the longer the fertility is kept up. If we sell the hay from our meadows, we have taken away a great share of what was needed to keep up the fertility, leaving only a short stable to return in a decayed state to help produce another annual growth. This supply being only small, in a few years the yield is lessened below a paying crop, even from the best grass lands. Not so with pastures, as the droppings from the stock kept upon it, return to the soil all that has grown from it, besides the liquid manure, which is of great value. This is true without regard to latitude or longitude. If we cut up our corn there is little left in the stumps and roots to keep up the life of the soil. So with all other crops. Western farmers understand that all farmers east of Ohio are in the habit of cutting up their corn, using all for feed and bedding. It may be wise to do so if there is much, or more, returned to the soil annually in fertilizers of some kind. This doctrine, too, will hold good at the West. But the prairie corn fields are usually too large to handle the coarse fodder as in the Eastern States, and if we did, not many years hence we would be obliged to resort to manufactured fertilizers at high cost, as the eastern men do now. By turning under, as we do, all we can of each year's crop of stubble, cornstalks and broom cornstalks, we return much more of vegetable growth than if it went through the process of decomposition in the barnyard.

It seems to me that all vegetable matter should be returned to the soil before it has gone into decay anywhere else than where it grew. Hay, cornstalks and straw must be used for fodder for domestic animals, and the manure, however carefully saved and judiciously returned to the soil, it is of much less real value than if the stalks and straw had been left in the field. There is a gain in the animals fed, but a loss in the amount of crop-producing food returned to the field. I am sorry to know that there are men who yet advocate the practice of burning the surplus straw, cornstalks and roughness of any kind, instead of spreading and plowing them under. The argument used is that this burning is the only sure way of reducing the number of chinch bugs and Colorado beetles, and they even advise mowing out fence corners, gathering up the weeds, and burning everything in which these insects harbor. There are also a few in Illinois, who in the spring break down the remaining cornstalks, rake them into heaps and burn them, to get them out of the way of the plow and cultivator. I must say that the chinch bugs and Colorado beetles are not there; at least no more are found in this roughness than anywhere else, in proportion to space occupied. The chinch bug is everywhere—on the ground, on the fences, green grass and dry grass. I have had long experience with the Colorado beetles, and have yet to learn that at any time after the potato vines have ripened, the beetle remains in or about the vines, or any roughness. Their home, when vegetation is dry, is in the ground, far below the reach of any fire from light rubbish.

A few days ago I was in conversation with the president of our farmers' club. He gave, in brief, his experience after long practice, and it is the universal practice of all our best farmers. He burns no straw piles, or anything else, on his fields. In the spring after his cornstalks have been pastured all winter, he cuts them down with a cornstalk cutter and plows them under. He fall plows all his grain stubble. Also with the cornstalk cutter he goes over his broom-corn fields. He uses a riding plow with rolling coulter. In this way all is turned under ready for the action of the elements during the winter. In the spring he only harrows before planting. The stalks after being plowed under have a wonderful effect upon the soil, as it is kept loose and the sun and air penetrates freely—a point that too many farmers overlook. Mr. H. does his plowing with as shallow a furrow as he can gauge his plow to run and turn a full furrow, holding that all fertilizers should be kept as near the surface as possible—only deep enough to find moisture to decay. When plowing stalks under, a deeper furrow is needed—five inches, perhaps; not to exceed six inches. As the slanting teeth harrows do much of the corn cultivation, the stalks are seldom disturbed after being once plowed under. He related an experiment tried one year in a field where a part was stubble fall plowed, and the other was spring plowed, turning heavy broom-corn stalks under. Each part of the field had the same cultivation, and was planted at the same time. The part where the stalks were plowed under yielded 15 bushels per acre more than the grain stubble part.—Country Gentleman.

Remember the poor.

CARE OF MEAT.

At this season of the year the care of the fresh beef and pork which is to be salted and otherwise preserved for future use, adds not a little to the labors of the farmer's wife. It is not the most delightful task in the world, and happy the woman whose "men folks" relieve her of all care and responsibility in the matter. Her lines have indeed fallen in pleasant places and she should call her husband "blessed." There are few, however, to whom the "butchering" does not bring dirty and disagreable work to do.

Those who supervise the packing should see to it that the meat is perfectly cold before it is packed; the animal heat should be entirly out of it. The barrel, too, must be perfectly sweet and clean; the brine should be scalded, carefully skimmed, more salt and water added if a greater quantity is needed and the whole boiled togther and again skimmed. It should be entirely cold before being turned on the meat. Many prefer to pack the meat in barrels with a plentiful supply of salt and allow it to stand a day or so before the brine is poured over it. The brine must entirely cover the meat; and a weight should be placed on top to keep it down. Hams should, of course, have a sweet pickle prepared for them, and the same pickle is also good for the shoulders, which may be smoked if desired. Generally, however, the principal part of the shoulders, together with the trimmings of the meat, are manufactured into sausage, the lean of the meat rendering them especially desirable for that purpose. If the weather is favorable the ribs and tenderloin may be kept fresh for some time by freezing them solid, and this is a good practice, as one grows tired of so much fresh meat, and would prefer keeping some of it till there is less to be handled. I must confess that is my household experience the heads and feet were given to the chickens and the cats; a pig's head being a rather revolting article to meddle with. But I am told that this is wasteful. Possibly, but headcheese and pigs' feet do not enter into my own bill of fare. If used, the heads must be cleaned nicely and soaked in a weak brine until all the blood is out.

Lard, of course, must receive immediate attention. The leaf lard only needs to be thoroughly cooled before it is cut up, the kernels removed, and tried out; but the rough lard should be soaked at least twenty-four hours in water to which a small quantity of salt is added; the water should be changed at least once in the interval. Before trying out take it from the water and drain thoroughly, then with a sharp knife cut it in small pieces and pick out every bit of skin, the "strings" and the dark colored kernels which occur frequently. It is these kernels which render the rough lard unpleasant in flavor, and the want of soaking which gives it such a disagreeable odor. Some housekeepers do not know that to fry raw potatoes in the rough lard will make it nearly equal in quality to that obtained from the leaf. It should be turned into pans and suffered to get cold, then re-melted and when hot enough slice in the potatoes, a few at a time, preparing for a considerable of a commotion in the kettle when you put them in. Lard intended for summer use should be turned when just melted into stone jars, and a piece of cloth cut to fit the top of the jar put on top and this covered an inch deep with damp salt; this effectually prevents any access of air to the lard, and it will keep perfectly fresh and sweet for a long time.

No matter in how great a hurry you may be to "get the dirty job done," don't pack the meat, make the sausage or try out the lard until the meat is thoroughly cold. The people who boast of having their pigs killed and all such work done in the same day may be "smart," but—this is a case in which delays are not dangerous, but beneficial.

CRANBERRY DUMPLING.—One quart of flour, one teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, sifted together, mix into a soft dough with sweet milk; roll the dough out very thin in oblong shapes and spread over it one quart of cranberries, picked and washed clean; add half a pound of sugar, sprinkle evenly; fold over and over, then tie in a pudding cloth and put in a steamer where let it cook over a steady fire for one hour, with faith, never looking into the pot. Serve with sweet wine sauce.

PERMANENT SOD.

"Sod," in a farming sense, means a network of grasses and forage plants occupying the surface of the ground. It is altogether probable that a new sod on good ground and in a favorable season may produce a greater weight of hay than one of many years duration, but the question relates more to the feeding value of the crop than to its weight. Analyses have been repeatedly published showing that hay from old meadows contain a greater percentage of albuminoids and less woody fibre than new meadow hay of timothy. Some grasses are especially adapted to grazing and others to mowing, and grass land long used for either purpose alone will become chiefly occupied by grasses adapted to the use to which it is put. The flat stalked blue grass, which has few and short seed stalks, and a dense mass of fine leaves may be taken as a representative of the creeping growth; this gives on an apparently short sod, a full bite of rich grass, but cannot be expected to yield a great weight of hay. In Great Britain farmers consider twenty years as necessary to bring a re-seeded sod to a condition approaching a permanent one; and farm lands bring the highest rents in a locality where permanent sod enters most largely into the farm system. Residents of the blue grass region of Kentucky claim that an acre of good blue grass hay would make more beef than an equal amount of any other kind of hay, though the blue grass might weigh less, and farmers from the Piedmont section estimate good blue grass hay as about equal to its own weight of wheat, bran and middlings for growing stock and horses at moderate work. In many sections of New England hay from old meadows brings from 20 to 25 per cent. more per ton than that from new sod. The owners of a large stock farm in the Connecticut valley, where all operations in stock feeding are conducted with an eye to pecuniary profit, consider three tons of hay from their own meadows, some of which have been established for fifty years, as equal in feeding value to five tons of the rank growth from new meadows.

This question of permanent sod pastures is one which might be profitably considered by Michigan farmers, where frequent re-seeding is so generally practiced.

DAMP OR DRY STORAGE.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune reports a prominent fruit grower as saying that whenever he found a celler in which he was obliged to walk on boards to keep out of the water, he was sure to find the fruit in good condition. By many it has been considered that a dry cellar with cement bottom is absolutley essential to the proper keeping of fruit. This gentleman says: "As an experiment, during apple picking last fall selections were made of the Northern Spy and Yellow Bellflower, carefully handled; each specimen was wrapped separately in paper and placed in ventilated packages and stored immediately in my cellar, where, owing to the springy nature of the location, notwithstanding the thorough drainage, during the spring months, water would be found on portions of the earth bottom. The result was that on July 2d samples of the Spy were in good condition and Bellflowers held out well until June 1st." As neither variety is classed as good keepers, but rather as "holiday fruit," it is evident that dampness or a wet cellar is not detrimental to the long keeping of winter fruit.

BOILED POTATOES.

To boil a potato properly is thought to be a very simple affair, and yet there is not one table in fifty where they appear in that perfection which makes a potato "boiled with its jacket on" one of the most delicious esculents. People who do not know what a boiled potato is, in that high state when it appears smoking from the pot, and bursting like a cotton pod into mealy whiteness, neither too wet or too dry, but always piping hot as it is stripped of its skin, and prepared for its garnish of salt and butter, with pepper according to taste—people who do not know the boiled potato in that state of perfection, content themselves with the esculent sliced and fried in grease, an abomination to the cultured palate and a terror to delicate stomachs; and think they know what potatoes are. Next to a potato baked, a potato boiled properly, touches the gastronomic economy in its tenderest region, and does not pall upon the taste, though it be served at table three hundred and sixty-five times a year.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—AND THE ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more for his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict, may be consulted at his office, St. Louis, Mo., until the 20th of December, after that at his New York office. Office address is in the St. Louis city newspapers.

Mr. B. F. George, Attorney at Law, Kent, Union Co. Iowa, treated by Dr. Sherman at his St. Louis office, writes: "Having used your Rupture treatment, and having been permanently cured, I have spoken highly of its merits and recommend it to my friends."

Dr Sherman is the discoverer of the only known cure for Rupture by local external treatment.

No man is safe who has a Rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is steadily progressive, even unto death and he is wise who takes the necessary steps to be effectually relieved of it before the day of suffering and gloom comes upon him.

Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day. During treatment any kind of active exercise or labor can be performed without interfering with the treatment, and with safety from the dangers of strangulated Rupture. HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen, and merchants of his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies. The afflicted should read it and inform themselves.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents.

THE INDEPENDENT.

"The foremost religious newspaper in the United States."—Joseph Cook.

The Independent seeks the patronage of the public on three grounds, as follows:

1st. It is the largest weekly religious newspaper published in the world.

2d. It employs as contributors more able writers, at home and abroad, than any other weekly newspaper.

3d. It gives its readers a wider range of topics and more and fuller departments than they can find elsewhere in any journal.

The Independent consists of 32 pages, neatly cut and pasted. It is printed from clear type (we stereotype the pages weekly, and, hence, every issue is really printed with new type) and on good paper, and mechanically it is unexcelled.

There is no question of prominence in religion, politics, science, education, finance, or any other department of human knowledge which The Independent does not discuss. It has regular departments devoted to Biblical Research, Missions, Religious Intelligence, Book Reviews and Literary News, the Sunday School, Elocution, Science, Sanitary questions, Fine Arts, the movements of ministers, Personalities, News of the Week, Financial and Commercial matters, including weekly Prices Current, Market Reports, Cattle Market, Dry Goods Quotations, Flowers and Farming, and Insurance. In its religious department it gives news and statistics of all denominations of Christians, everywhere. In fullness, accuracy and comprehensiveness this department is unequaled. Several pages of stories and poems adapted to old and young are given every week, with a column of Puzzles.

From time to time the Sermons by eminent ministers are published. The current topics of the day are discussed in our editorial columns freely and vigorously. We are not afraid to state our opinions.

Tuesday morning three of them were dead and he thinks they will all die, as they all act about the same.

FRANKLIN.

A mistake occured in our communication last week in relation to the presents bestowed upon Mr. and Mrs. A. Wilson on Thanksgiving day. The arm chair presented to Mr. W. was omitted entirely, and the compositor (or devil) made us say the presents were "praised" instead of "prized" above their intrinsic value.

The rental of pews of the Congregational church took place yesterday afternoon. But the amount realized did not meet the expectations of the society, and it is feared they will be unable to raise a sufficient amount to procure Prof. Lowrie's services, which we think is very much to be regretted.

Our Township Treasurer will be at Tuttle's hall on each Thursday during the month for the purpose of receiving taxes.

There was an interesting gathering at the Grange hall in Macon, on Wednesday of last week. The meeting was gotten up by the friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Remington for the purpose of giving expression to their sympathy for the loss by fire recently sustained by Mr. R. Remarks suitable to the occasion were made by the Revs. Field of Ridgeway, Pardington of Tecumseh, Kershow of Macon, and others. Oysters were served to about one hundred persons. The more substantial tokens consisted of 85 quarts canned fruit, a quantity of potatoes and apples, crocks of pickles, one dress, shoes, sheets, earthen and silver ware valued at $30, and other useful articles. The affair was a surprise to Mr. and Mrs. R., they being sent for when dinner was ready.

CLINTON.

When a Clinton cockney nods in church is it not a clear case of bull-dozing?

As an evidence of the growing popularity of Clinton industries we are told that Silvers, the clothier, has just made to measure a number of fine suits for parties who reside in distant states. Two suits were finished and sent last week to Lincoln, Neb., and three others recently to points in Iowa. His work is very popular at home.

L. A. Dudley spent last Sabbath with friends here. He is in partnership with a friend in business at Homer.

John Bush, for the past seven years in the employ of John Smith & Son, has bought W. S. Kimball's interest in the grocery store of W. W. Demuth & Co. Mr. Bush is an honest, upright business man, and as such deserves the patronage of all wanting goods in his line.

A bloodless encounter took place on Monday afternoon in front of McClure's harness shop, in which two brothers-in-law were the chief actors, the "old man" acting the part of mediator by way of slapping the son-in-law a broadside over the eye. Each called the other some pet names and finally cooled down by threatening to furnish the meat markets with first-class bolognas if the trio ever meet again.

KELLEY'S CORNERS.

Not seeing anything in your paper from our little town, I thought it time we had a place in the columns of the HERALD.

We had quite a sensation here a short time ago; there was a wedding to take place, the guests and clergyman were assembled, all waiting for the bridegroom. Eleven o'clock came but he failed to put in an appearance, and the guests not to be beat in that way marched to the table and partook of the wedding supper. The bride after thinking the matter over thought she had made a lucky escape. When the news spread in the morning that a bridegroom was missing quite a number of our citizens found that they had been left in the lurch from eight to ten dollars.

We have a new boot and shoe shop at our place.

Mr. O. Kelley is doing quite a business in wheat and pork buying.

Quite a number of horses are badly afflicted with the epizootic.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Adrian Press: George Ferguson, a prominent farmer of Deerfield, is putting in 6,000 tile on his farm this fall. He put in 2,900 last week and will have in the balance soon. He has continued the work right through the cold weather.

Adrian Press: A grave row about the old cemetery at Tecumseh is imminent. Mr. Van Vleet claims the ground and has laid out a croquet ground thereon. The village dads "will be dodrotted" if they can see it, and will resist Mr. VanVleet's claim till the resurrection. They think he claims tomb much.

Morenci Observer: A horse the property of Mr. D. W. Smith, was stolen from the premises of Benj. Reasoner, in Medina township, last Sunday night. The animal is thus described: Of brown color, weighs about a 1,000 pounds, and has had on its fore feet ringbones which are cured but not haired over. The owner offers $20 reward for the horse's recovery—$56 for both horse and thief.

Hudson Post: As the Republican county committee for Lenawee county is without funds to liquidate bills incurred during the late campaign, and claim that some of the candidates do not pay their assessments, would it not be well for them to publish a report of their receipts and expenditures, together with such bills as remain unpaid and assessments uncollected?

Blissfield Advance: There is a society in our midst composed of small girls, which is not generally known of in the village. It has for its object the relief of the poor, and meets every two weeks at the home of one of its members. Such an institution is a most worthy one, and we hope the little Band of Hope, as they are termed, may succeed in alleviating the sufferings of many of the destitute of the village.

Morenci Observer: Mr. A. McCabe, of this township, who went a couple of months since on his third annual hunt to Ogemaw county, returned on Saturday evening last. During his stay in the hunting camp he and his partners killed 64 deer besides other game. He describes the country there as abounding with high hills, interspersed with level plains, covered with second growth pine, making the scenery the grandest in the State.

Deerfield Record: Numerous cases of petty thefts are reported in this place of late. A short time ago G. V. Bailey missed several shirts that were hung out to dry. Ladovia Smith had a large quantity of beef stolen from his house on Thanksgiving day, while himself and family were away enjoying a bountiful dinner. Hilory Roberts also reports having lost several spring chickens. A good application of the shot-gun policy would perhaps be the best thing to present these midnight marauders.

Hudson Post: On Monday evening Mary Camp, grand-daughter of W. C. Taylor, and living with Henry Austin, on the George Brown farm in Pittsford, received severe and probably fatal injuries from scalding. It seems that the girl went through the wood-room to shake the tablecloth at the door, and in returning fell into a large kettle of hot brine that had been left standing there. Her limbs, back and abdomen are terribly scalded.—Dr. Nix was summoned, and all the relief that could be afforded was administered, but is very uncertain as to her recovery. The girl is eleven years old, and is the daughter of A. H. Camp, who is somewhere in the northern part of the State.

Morenci Observer: The insatiate reaper death has gathered in another of the early settlers of Gorham township, in the person of Willard Gay, who died of a lung difficulty early on Wednesday morning of this week.—In October last, while gathering fruit, he fell from an apple tree and was supposed to be fatally injured at the time, but from this he recovered and was able to be about until last week, when he was violently attacked with a lung difficulty, resulting, it is supposed, from his fall, and he lingered until Wednesday morning when he peacefully passed away. Mr. Gay was a native of the state of New York, and came to Gorham about 36 years ago, and fully identified himself with the early settlers in the struggle to convert the forest into fertile fields. He was an industrious, energetic citizen, prompt in all his dealings, and well known in this region. He was for many years a member of the Odd Fellows of this village, who cared for him in his last hours and took charge of his burial. He leaves a wife and two children and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

THE MARRIED MAN

Adown the street the hurried man
Sharpoff with blanched cheek,
But from the door a merry voice
Calls, "Don't forget the brooms."

He smiles and nods, and turns to go
The careless married man,
When hard the servant calls from out "Or
You haven't got the pan!"

He nods again, in doubtful mood
The middle door up he goes,
And he, his shaver with a dash
Cries, "What's you orders gal?"

"Oh, yes" in accents, soft, (truth to tell
He dreaded most to hear)
But earth's his son, with a scowl or yell,
"Theater tickets for the crowd."

His daughter, from the window high,
Entops him with her calls,
She wants a fan, a pair of gloves,
And a new pink parasol.

He hears no more; far down the street
His echoing footsteps fly;
And all day long, in measure fleet,
He hums, "sweet buy and buy."

But when the evening respite brings,
And his day's toil is done,
Though told to get a hundred things
He hasn't got a one.

THE GOLD OF HOPE.

Bright shines the sun, but brighter after rain;
The clouds that darken make the sky more clear;
So rest is sweeter when it follows pain,
And the sad parting makes our friends more dear.

'Tis well it should be thus: our Father knows
The things that work together for our good;
We draw a sweetness from our bitter woes—
We would not have all sunshine if we could.

The days, with all their beauty and their light,
Come from the dark, and into dark return;
Day speaks of earth, but heaven shines through the night,
Where in the blue a thousand star-fires burn.

So runs the law, the law of recompense.
That bids a fair life on earth and heaven in one;
Faith cannot live when all is sight and sense,
But Faith can live and sing when these are gone.

We grieve and murmur for we can but see
The single thread that flies in silence by;
When if we only saw the things to be,
Our lips would breathe a song, not sigh.

Wait, then, my soul, and edge the darkening cloud
With the bright gold that Hope can always lend;
And if to-day thou art with sorrow bowed,
Wait till to-morrow, and thy grief shall end.

And when we reach the limit of our days,
Beyond the reach of shadows and of night,
Then shall our every look and voice be praise
To Him who shines, our everlasting light.

CAPTURING A WIFE.

Paul Cheney sat at his desk in the school-room of a rural district, where he had been teaching (to use a well-worn adage) the young idea how to shoot. His present task was that of writing a letter to a chum in his city home.

"No doubt (he wrote) you imagine I am dwelling in a sort of rural Arcadia, and just as far as physical nature goes, I am, for there can be nothing more green than the hills, nothing more clear, cool or limpid, or musical than the brooks that everywhere ribbon the valleys. Paradise itself could not produce more life-giving breezes, and yet my life is a burden, because the girls (and they are greatly the majority of my pupils) are such wide-awake, mischief-loving, tormenting beauties as were never before given to one person to manage. They will have their own way, and completely demoralize the school; they tease, coax, and wheedle me out of my most important rules, and when endurance ceases to be a virtue, cast upon me such reproachful glances and put up such pouting, pretty lips, that a fellow is tempted to seize his hat and vamose the ranch, as they say West. But in spite of my complaints, don't imagine me subjugated. I have at last issued positive commands for the students not to range off during study hours, as has been the practice.

A sort of Gypsy encampment is located near an isolated nook among the hills. Among the tribe is an old fortune-teller and of course the pretty heads of my female scholars are completely turned, and I have not only laid down the law against visiting the camp, but fixed a penalty thereto.

Now I know you will raise your hands in holy horror when I tell you that after exhausting every other form of punishment, from the dunce cap to writing lengthy compositions (the bitter abhorrence of every feminine heart!) and all to no purpose, I have in this instance resorted to the old-fashioned one, the ferrule. And so help me fate, I will carry it out to the bitter end, and make every little hand smart whose owner disobeys, or my name is not Paul Cheney."

The school house where our hero presided was situated some distance from the village where he boarded, and the walk, though pleasant, was lonely and passing a graveyard. And of late weird tales had been told of ghosts who walk there by moonlight, and in one or two instances, when the school-master had been belated he had observed an object clothed in white flit at a distance before him, and in his very path. Though a trifle startled, he had no doubt but it was a riddle that time would unravel. Therefore, upon the night when he had remained writing to the city friend, as he hurried homeward to be in time for supper, he gave the matter no thought, and had reached the boundary of the graveyard when he was confronted by the white-robed apparation, approaching him with extended arms.

The suggestions natural to its appearance were the reverse of pleasant, yet he never dreamed the gliding visitant was other than earthly, and quickened his pace to meet it, but to his astonishment it disappeared as quickly and entirely, as if swallowed by the earth. Not a little startled and puzzled, he hastened home, but kept his own counsel.

The next morning he proceeded to school more early than usual and spent some time in reconnoitering the walk of the ghost, and evidently to his satisfaction, for the broad smile that illuminated his face as he entered the school-room, appeared to assure the pupils that their teacher was in the best humor, and they would accordingly receive many indulgences.

At recess a number of pretty heads were in close consultation, and Sue Salmon, a black-eyed beauty said with a pout:

"Wasn't it mean for Mr. Cheney to threaten to whip any one who went up to the Gypsy encampment? Just as if he dared to do it!"

"I would like to see him ferrule my hand," chimed in May Ellis.

"Or mine, either!" exclaimed Kitty Dalton. "What's the use of being such cowardly ninnies, girls? Let's go in spite of him."

"I will pay for any girl who will go with me to-day to have her fortune told," laughed Sue Salmon, merrily.

"Will you? Then we will all go, even if we have to submit to the punishment," answered May.

It was decided to run the risk, and accordingly when school closed at noon they marched off boldly to learn the mystery of the future.

"It must be half past one o'clock at least," exclaimed one of the number, as they were hastening back from their visit to the Gypsy camp, half repentant and anxious to know what would be the result of their breaking the law.

"I wish we hadn't gone," sighed Kitty mentally. "It was all your fault, Sue."

"I know it," returned the young lady with a merry laugh; "and I am ready not only to take my share of punishment, but yours as well."

"It is all very well to talk," said May, "but you are sure you will get off with the lightest penalty, and that you can do anything you please with Paul Cheney."

"Can I? Well, then I'll shield you for your disobedience. So cheer up and be brave." Here we are, and school has commenced."

They marched in and took their seats, and lifted their guilty eyes to encounter the indignantly flashing ones of their much abused teacher. Of all the scholars Sue was the prettiest, most lovable and most trying. She laughed his most serious and just reproof to scorn, and when she found he was really wounded, her great black eyes would flash up to him through tears and appeal to be forgiven. And somehow his voice always tuned itself lower when he addressed her, and in spite of himself she managed to throw upon him the solving of all her most difficult problems. She would come up to him with such a pretty, pleading pout, with "My head aches so," and protest she could not do her algebra unassisted; or "Might I not be excused from writing that dreadful composition for just this once, please?" And promised to do any thing else he wished; and she looked so winsome, pretty and bright when he yielded, that she usually carried the day.

So, when the master, in a hard, cold voice commanded the young ladies who were late to school to leave their seats and take places before his desk, to his surprise Sue said something in a whisper to her companions, and came gracefully and quickly forward alone, and leaning her white arms upon his desk as for support to her trembling limbs, said:

"Mr. Cheney, we have been to see the Gypsies, but I alone am to blame, and am ready to take the punishment you think the rest have merited together with what is my just due."

"Oh! you wish to make yourself a sort of scapegoat for your companions?" he questioned, with a flushed face.

"Yes, sir, if you please," murmured Sue.

"Well, if I don't please? I think you have sins enough of your own to answer for, without shouldering those of others."

"But really and truly," pleaded she, with tears in her glorious eyes, "I am alone to blame. They would not have gone but for me, and you will make me perfectly wretched if you punish them, when the fault was all mine," and she sobbed audibly.

"I should be sorry to do that," he answered. "It is enough that you make every day of my life wretched without my retaliating, and if you will answer for the good behavior of your companions in future it shall be as you desire."

"I will," promised Sue, but she grew deadly pale to the lips as he extended his hand to receive hers.

The next moment her little rosy palm lay in his great broad one, above which the ruler was poised for the blow; and though their hands were hidden behind the desk, the blows could be distinctly heard.

"One, two, three, four—one for each truant," said the teacher, looking down into the eyes of Sue, with an expression none but she could interpret.

The next instant the face of Sue was buried in her handkerchief, and her cheeks crimsoned as with shame. Then she spoke in a suppressed voice to the teacher, and he had to bend low to hear her.

"Who is the scapegoat now?" she questioned, and the dimples betrayed that her emotion was laughter, and if her eyes were filled with tears they were not sorrowful ones.

"Never mind," was answered by the teacher, as he bit his moustache to hide a smile, "You may take your seat now."

"What a generous soul," murmured Sue, as she laid her head upon the desk. "I knew he wouldn't strike me. His broad hand entirely covered mine and received every blow. How the girls would laugh if they knew it. But I won't tell. That shall be our little secret."

The remainder of the afternoon she studied very diligently and recited cleverly, though there was a very saucy light burning in her brown eyes that argued ill for some one.

When school closed for the day, the girls flocked around her with many expressions of sympathy.

"It was so good and noble in you, Sue, to take all the blame and the punishment," exclaimed May.

"And how ridiculous he looked pounding the little hand of a lady," added Kitty. "I am sure he must think very little of himself, and, as for me, I hate him."

"So do I," said Annie Miller, "and would sit up all night to find time to despise him."

"Don't be fools!" interrupted Sue, with a flash of anger. "I think he was very kind and generous to let us off as easy as he did, for we were wrong and he right."

"I thought it belonged to a gentleman's code of honor never to strike a woman," answered May, with a sneer.

"The truth is," replied Sue, "he fixed the penalty so severe and unrelenting that he supposed no one would disobey, and when he was forced to fulfill the law he punished one girl in place of four, and as it was neither of you, I think you ought to be satisfied. Suppose we let the subject drop."

"So be it. But if he remains at the school-house late again to-night, shan't we haunt him?"

"Yes," said Sue, "and it is my turn to be the ghost. There is jolly fun in that."

Meanwhile Paul Cheney was again writing to his city chum, and in conclusion he said:

"I have had a hard day. The girls were unusually provoking, and the knuckles of my left hand are very much swollen, from an injury received while punishing one of them. You need not be surprised to hear that I have given up teaching. The Plainville Academy is proving too much for me, and any day I may drop in upon you."

The letter finished, he started for his boarding place, but as he approached the grave-yard there flitted before him a white-robed ghost, which disappeared, as he neared it, with a mysterious facility. But, nothing daunted, he pressed rapidly onward to an immense hollow tree and forced his way into its depths. There was a smothered cry of alarm, the removing of a sheet, and Sue Salmon stood panting in the arms of Paul Cheney.

"So, I have at last captured the ghost," he said triumphantly.

"O, please let me go. See, you have frightened the girls, and they have all run away. So please let me go."

"I do not please just now, Miss Susie. I have a long account to settle with this particular ghost."

"Then settle it quickly, and let me go," she said, impatiently stamping her little foot.

"Well, let me see. How many nights have I been haunted on my way home?"

"This is my first night," asserted Sue. "All the girls took it by turns."

"Ah! did they? And you are generous enough to again be their scapegoat, and take punishment along with your own?"

"Yes, yes; only please let me go."

"And there were four of you," and stooping down to her flushed face he left four kisses burning there.

"I will never forgive you," she exclaimed, struggling from him, and, standing a little apart, began twisting her long, loosened hair, and coiling it at the back of her pretty head.

"I shall be sorry for that, very sorry, Susie dear. As I told you to-day, you make my life miserable, yet I love you with all my soul."

"And I hate you," she replied passionately.

"Are you going, Susie," questioned he, "and without a single kind word?"

"Yes!" she snapped out, "and give me that sheet. I am sure I don't know what mother will say, because it is so torn."

"One little word," he continued, "before you go. We may not have another opportunity to see each other alone, as I shall leave this place next week."

"Going away?" she asked, with a little quiver in her voice, and staying her steps.

"The term will soon be out, and I shall not teach longer—least of all those who hate and refuse to be guided by me."

She drew nearer to his side, with downcast eyes, and giving him her hand said softly:

"Forgive me, Mr. Cheney, I have been very unkind and rebellious. To-day you bruised your own hand to save mine. I saw how red and swollen it was, and that was the most severe punishment you could have inflicted on me."

"A bruised hand is nothing to a bruised heart," he replied.

"I did not know that I was injuring so important an organ."

"When you say you hate me darling—"

"I—I did not mean I hated you. I am very grateful, and—and so sorry you are going away."

"Then if you love me," he whispered, twining an arm about her, "bid me stay."

"Then—stay—stay, only—"

"Only what, Susie?"

"I am done being scapegoat for any mortal or ghost either."

"That is right, and henceforth receive only rewards."

What she might have said in response, he never knew, as her lips were for the moment effectually sealed.

A few months later Paul Cheney's city friend was not surprised at his return, though he was at his bringing back a bride, the chief of his tormentors.

"Our Girls."

Anna Dickinson, Grace Greenwood, and others of that class have given so much of their time to discussing the important matter of female education, that it would seem as if were the girls trained at home in about the following manner, the wise heads would have something else to talk and write about.

Teach them thoroughly the following important things:

Self-reliance and independence.
How to make bread, and cook well.
How to make shirts.
Not to wear false hair.
Not to powder or paint.
Not to run up store bills.
To wear thick, warm shoes.
To wash and iron clothes.
To make their own dresses.
That a dollar is only a hundred cents.
To darn stockings and sew on buttons.
To say no, and mean it—or yes, and stick to it.
To wear calico dresses, and not feel ashamed of them.
That a good, rosy romp is worth fifty consumptives.
To regard the morals and not the money of their beaux.
To have nothing to do with intemperate and dissolute young men.
To keep a house in neat order, with everything in its place.
That the more one lives within one's income, the more one will save.
That the farther one gets beyond one's income, the nearer one gets to the poor-house.
That a good, steady mechanic without a cent is worth a dozen loafers in shiny broadcloth.
Accomplishments, such as music, painting and drawing—if they have the taste, and you have the time and money.
That God made them in his image, and no amount of tight lacing will improve their appearance.
Teach them every day some item of dry, hard, practical common sense, and they will yet find time for idealisms.
Give them, of course, a good, substantial common-school education, but don't neglect home training.

Antidote to Poison.

If a person swallows any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, most efficient and applicable in a large number of cases, is a heaping teaspoonful of common salt, and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacupful of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up, bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach; and lest there be any remnant of the poison, however small, let the white of an egg or a teaspoonful of strong coffee be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet, because these very common articles nullify a large number of virulent poisons.

The lark goes singing toward heaven; but if she stops the motion of her wings, then straightway she falls. So it is with him who prays not. Prayer is the movement of the wings of the soul; it bears heavenward, but without prayer he sinks in the filth of earthly impulses.

WOMAN'S WIT.

An Incident of the Fenian Rising of 1867.

The following amusing incident occurred during the Fenian excitement of '67 in Ireland:

Two young men, fugitive Fenians, were hiding in the mountains, when the mother of one of them was taken sick unto death. She wanted to see her boy once more, and a faithful messenger summoned him from the hills. His companion went with him and he had the melancholy satisfaction of seeing his mother alive. As soon as the vital spark had fled the fugitives made for the friendly fastnesses of the mountains. They had traveled about three miles when the preconcerted screech of the woman warned them of danger. They took refuge under a bridge.

A flying column had come upon the old woman, and pretending to be frightened she screamed. The stipendiary magistrate began to examine her, when the following dialogue, as detailed by a government official, who had made notes of the conversation, took place. Her object was to delay and outwit the pursuers. The magistrate's object was to find if she was a native of the locality and knew all the inhabitants:

"What's your name?"

"I forgot to bring it wud me; it's at home."

"Come, tell your name?"

"Musha, begorra an' me name is Mary."

"Mary what?"

"No, indade, but Mary Malowney."

"Where were you born?"

"In bed, to be sure—where else?—That's a purty question to ask."

"When were you born?"

"Faith, an' I don't remember, but I belave it was in the nite time."

"How many years ago?"

"Just two weeks before Jim Casey's father took the rheumaticks, an' that was three weeks after Dromane Castle got fire, an' it was distinguished a month afore Donnolly bate Cooper.—Rickin that up an' ye have me age, av that's what ye're after."

"Where do you live and how do you get there?"

"Troth an' I live at home, an' I get there on my feet."

"What road do you go home?"

"Down beyant the bridge there ye can see a house on the thumb-hand av a haystack comin' up; about three miles farther at this side there's a pig an' a barn sittin' down; that's a mile from Liskea churchyard. Whin ye git there ye'll hear a bull roarin' an' I live widin the ball av an ass uv that."

"You're a satisfactory individual."

"You're a lyin' thafe; I'm an honest woman, so I am, and you're not."

"Come, now, what do you know about the Fenians?"

"Och! not much for nothin'."

"I'll give two pounds if you will tell me where two of them, named McCabe and Maher, are hid."

"Arrah, they'd kill me av they found me out; an' besides, I'll be informin' on my own godson, Ned McCabe. But av you don't tell who tould ye I'll send ye on their track far five pound, and pay me the money down."

"The money is all right; you'll be paid when they are caught."

"Ye'd better be afther catchin' 'em thin. The top av the evening ta ye."

"Come back, here's the money."

"For God sake don't to tell who tuk the blud money, and go to Maher's house an' ye'll find 'em in the room back of the one where Maher's mother, God be merciful to her, is on her dyin' bed. Av ye go there quick ye will find Maher gettin' his mother's blessin', God help him."

The party hurried up, but of course were disappointed, while the fugitives gained their retreat in safety, and the old woman pocketed the five pounds.

HOME ADORNMENT.

Nature is active in adorning her dominions; and man, to whom this beauty is addressed, should feel and obey the lesson. Let him, too, be industrious in adorning his domain—in making his home, the dwelling of his wife and children, not only convenient and comfortable, but pleasant. Let him, as far as circumstances will admit, be industrious in surrounding it with pleasant objects; in decorating it, within and without, with things that tend to make it agreeable and attractive. Let industry make home the abode of neatness and order—a place which brings satisfaction to every inmate, and which in absence draws back the heart by the fond associations of content. Let this be done, and this sacred spot will become more surely the scene of cheerfulness and peace. Ye parents who would have your children happy, be industrious to bring them up in the midst of a pleasant, a cheerful, and a happy home. Waste not your time in accumulating wealth for them, but plant in their minds and souls, in the way proposed, the seeds of virtue and prosperity.

The man who does not know how to put in his time, generally manages to spend a portion of his time in the penitentiary.

The Friend of Delicate Ladies.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the remedy that will cure the many diseases peculiar to women—Headache, neuralgia, disordered nerves, weakness, mental shocks and kindred ailments are effectually removed by its use.—The Mothers' Magazine.

A NEW PAYING OCCUPATION FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

The handsome Nickel Plated New Home Lamp being introduced to the public this season, is the most meritorious article ever offered. Agents to make money with, is safer, and more convenient than the Student Lamp, which has heretofore had the reputation of being the Safest Lamp made, it has a clamp to firmly attach it to the Sewing Machine, Piano, Organ, Desk, etc. The fear of the ordinary lamp being accidentally upset or thrown from the table, is entirely believed by this simple contrivance. It can be adjusted to throw the light just where it is wanted to suit the eyes, and can be converted into a handsome wall lamp. It has the best argand burner, a filling indicator, and convenient match box, and its price is within the reach of everyone. It has been fully tested and editorially endorsed by the "Western Christian Advocate," "Am. Christian Review," "Herald and Presbyter," "Journal and Messenger," and "Christian Standard," the leading Religious papers of Cincinnati, and is endorsed by the Mayor and Post-Master of Cincinnati, the Agent of the American Express Companies, as being the Safest, Most Convenient and best Lamp made.

There are three reasons why Agents should seek such an article to canvass for—first for its absolute safety and great convenience, it is needed in every home—second its low price makes its sale immense—third it will be a credit to handle such an article. One southern Agent writes, it sells faster than Gen. Lee's portrait sold right after the war, another writes it beats the palmy days of the Sewing Machine, its rapid sale, low price, and liberal terms surprise old Agents.—Address Home Lamp Co., Cincinnati, O. Mentioning our paper and they will give you full particulars and exclusive territory to canvass in.

Mother Love.

An incident has just come under my eyes which so entirely conflicts with my ideas in regard to the fighting qualities of wild rabbits, that I give it for an extreme oddity. During the morning, one of my children came in with a very white face, and an account of a large white snake just seen in the back yard. A few minutes later a peculiar squalling or crying in the quarter where the snake was attracted my attention, and running hastily in that direction I was astonished to see the last half of a long chicken snake projecting from under a picket fence, and a wild rabbit biting and stamping on it, apparently making a determined effort to hold on and prevent the snake from going entirely under. A second later, and before my presence was noticed by the combatants, the cause of the rabbits's efforts and of the peculiar noise was manifested by the appearance on one side of the fence of the snake's head with a tiny rabbit in its jaws. The little rabbit was held by the hind quarters and was struggling and crying vigorously for the liberty that a blow from my stick, administered to the back of the snake, secured to it. The little fellow seemed uninjured, and ran off a rod or so, where the mother rabbit, who had retreated a little at my near approach, joined it, and leading the way at a deliberate gait, took it to the woods near by. It was the strongest evidence of a mother's love and care for its offspring I have ever seen or heard of, and is the only instance I have ever known of a rabbit showing the slightest aggressive disposition; in fact, I had supposed they were entirely without any. W. S. WARNE.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—AND THE ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more, on his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury it usses inflict, may be consulted at his office, St. Louis, Mo., until the 20th of December, after that at his New York office. Office address is in the St. Louis city newspapers.

Mr. R. F. George, Attorney at Law, Kent Union Co. Iowa, treated by Dr. Sherman at his St. Louis office, writes: "Having used your Rupture treatment, and having been permanently cured, I have spoken highly of its merits and recommend it to my friends."

Dr. Sherman is the discoverer of the only known cure for Rupture by local external treatment.

No man is safe who has a Rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment, and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is steadily progressive, even unto death, and he is wise who takes the necessary steps to be effectually relieved of it before the day of suffering and gloom comes upon him.

Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day. During treatment any kind of active exercise or labor can be performed without interfering with the treatment, and with safety from the dangers of strangulated Rupture. HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen, and merchants of his successful practice and popularity the retrum throughout this country and the West Indies. The afflicted should read it and inform themselves.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

We make the following abstract from it:

After refering to the business prosperity of the country, the message then takes up the sectionalism and says that the right of the negro must be preserved and that it is the duty of Congress to legislate so as to guard and protect the legitimate results of the war as set forth in the Constitution.

The best and surest guaranty of the rights of citizenship is to be found in that capacity for self-protection which can belong only to a people whose right to universal suffrage is supported by universal education.

The president calls attention to his previously expressed views on the dangers of patronage, or appointments for personal or partisan considerations, and repeats his warning that these dangers threaten the stability of the government, and recommends that competitive examinations be held, and an appropriation of $25,000 a year is recommended for the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the president, whose duty it shall be to devise a just, uniform and efficient system of examinations, and to supervise the application of the same throughout the entire civil service of the government. Legislation is also recommended which will enable any officer to feel as safe as any private citizen in refusing all demands upon his salary for political purposes.

Efforts have been made in vain by the United States authorities to suppress polygamy in Utah. Congress is therefore urged to provide for the government of Utah by a governor and judges or commissioners, appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate; or if this be impracticable, then to continue the present form of government, but limit the right to vote, to hold office and sit on juries to those who neither practice nor uphold polygamy.

As to the fishery troubles the British government has receded from its former position, and the differences which seemed irreconcilable will be adjusted and it is believed their repetition will be impossible.

We have concluded a convention with the French for the settlement of claims of the citizens of either country against the other, and a commission on claims is now sitting in Washington under this convention.

There are fewer complaints of molestation suffered by naturalized citizens in Germany than ever before, and progress is making towards an understanding between the two governments in the interpretation of the treaty of naturalization.

During the past summer several American vessels were fired on and searched by Spanish cruisers in the West Indies. The matter was brought to the attention of the Spanish government, and is now undergoing investigation. Congress is urged to take action on the claims against this country under the Florida treaty heretofore submitted.

The work of the commission sent to China has progressed with such rapidity that two treaties were signed on the 17th ult., one relating to immigration of Chinese to this country and the other to commerce.

With Japan a convention has been negotiated for the reciprocal relief of shipwrecked seamen. The proper distribution of the indemnity funds received some years ago from Japan and China and the return of any unclaimed balance is also urged.

With Mexico.—The border troubles have ended and the obstacles to railroad communication between the two countries are on the point of disappearing.

The views expressed in a special message to congress in March last, in relation to the Isthmus canal are again urged, later news having confirmed the opinion "that it is the right and duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the Isthmus that connects North and South America as will protect our national interest."

The services of this government were accepted by Chili and Peru, in endeavoring to amicably settle their differences, but the negotiations were of no avail.

In pursuance of an act passed at the last session a sanitary conference to be participated in by many prominent maritime powers, will begin its sessions January 1st, in Washington.

The president goes on to urge that our trade with South America and the Pacific ought to be more extended, and he calls on congress to make such modifications of our relations of trade and navigation as shall enlarge our carrying trade.

A suggestion is made that our commerce would be very greatly benefited by a transmarine cable laid from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands, and thence to Japan at the north and Australia at the south, and that congress should promote such a scheme by special legislation.

The financial condition and prosperity of the country are better than those of any other nation in the world.

The total ordinary revenues of the government, from all sources, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, were $333,526,610 98; total ordinary expenditures, $267,642,957 78, leaving a surplus revenue of $65,883,653 20.

The national debt attained its maximum $2,756,431,571 43 in August, 1865, and has since been reduced to $1,886,019,504 65.

Contrary to the hopes of those who urged the coinage of the silver dollar of 412½ grains, it has not increased in value and does not seem likely to ever equal the standard gold dollar. Under these circumstances the farther coinage of "a dollar which is not a dollar" ought to be stopped unless the country wants to accept a single metal as the sole legal standard of value in circulation, and that a standard of less value than it purports to be worth in the recognized money of the world. Congress ought to discontinue the coinage of the dollar of 412½ grains, and in its stead authorize the secretary of the treasury to coin silver dollars of the same value as bullion with gold dollars.

The strength of the army should be increased the statute limit of 30,000 enlisted men; 150 schoolmasters should be enlisted with the rank and pay of commissary sergeants; liberal appropriations should be made for the active militia of the country.

The president says the appropriation of $150,000,000 for a breakwater and harbor of refuge on the 600-mile stretch of unprotected coast between San Francisco and the Columbia river is entirely too small and should be increased.

The attention of congress is commended to the services of the commander-in-chief of the armies during the war for the Union, and an act of congress authorizing the appointment of a captain-general of the army with suitable provisions relating to compensation, retirement, etc., would meet with executive approval.

Referring to the report of the secretary of the navy, the message states that the total expenditures for the year were $12,916,689.45, leaving at the end of the year $2,141,682.23 of the available appropriations for the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1881, and $15,095,061.45, and the total estimates for the next fiscal year are $15,953,751.61.

The secretary of the navy has taken steps toward the establishment of coaling stations at the Isthmus of Panama, to meet the requirements of our commercial relations with Central and South America.

The report of the postmaster-general exhibits the continued growth and the high state of efficiency of the postal service. In 1860 the postal receipts were $8,518,067.40; in 1880 they were $33,315,479.34. During the past year there was an increase of 2,134 post-offices, and the mail routes were extended 27,177 miles, making an additional annual transportation of 10,804,191 miles.

The attorney general recommends the establishment of an intermediate court of errors and appeals. It is recommended that the number of judges in the circuit courts, with the exception of the second circuit, be increased by the addition of another judge for each circuit and two more in the second circuit, and that an intermediate appelate court should be formed in each circuit to consist of the circuit judges and the circuit justice, and in case of absence the place of the absentee be supplied by the judge of one of the district courts in the circuit.

The aborigines have made gratifying progress in agriculture and mechanical pursuits. The introduction of the freighting business among them has been remarkably fruitful of good results. Their honesty and efficiency as carriers are highly praised. The organization of a police force of Indians has been successful in maintaining order on the reservations and in exercising a moral influence among the Indians themselves. The recommendation of the secretary of the interior that the pay of this force be increased is concurred in. Much care and attention has been devoted to the enlargement of educational facilities for the Indians. The means available for the purpose have been very inadequate, and increase of appropriations for this purpose is needed.

THE HERALD FOR 1881.

Thirty years ago on the 29th day of May last the initial number of the TECUMSEH HERALD greeted its patrons. Through all the succeeding years, it has sent its weekly message among the homes of Northern Lenawee, and exerted its humble influence for the business up-building of this portion of the Master's vineyard. Like all human undertakings it has had its ups and downs in life; it has been buffeted by the storms of adversity, and has basked in the sunshine of prosperity. But the days of uncertainty in the HERALD's history have passed. It has become one of the fixed institutions of this community. It has come to stay.

Improvement and progress are the watchwords of the present age. The whole country is feeling the hilarious effects of a grand business boom, and the newspaper fraternity, being among the first to feel the quickening impulse, are extending their lines, advancing their outposts, making new conquests and gaining new victories. In making the local history of this section of Michigan during the coming twelve months, the HERALD will occupy its accustomed position in the front rank. It has already achieved the distinction of being the best local newspaper in Lenawee county, and it will be a better local family paper during the year 1881 than it has ever been hitherto.

ITS CHARACTER.

A word in regard to its general character.

The HERALD has never been and never claimed to be a neutral paper.—It has always been—since the present owner conducted it—an independent paper, and such it will continue to be. The HERALD will be the organ of no party, sect or clique; but it must not be supposed that it will have no opinions of its own. We shall freely express our views on all topics, whether of a political, religious, social, temperance or general character.

While we shall endeavor to eschew all mere partisan debate in politics, we shall devote more attention and space than heretofore to the discussion of free trade and the tariff, of civil service reform, of revenue reform, of currency and trade, and all those economical and financial questions which are pressing themselves upon the people for solution. Party lines are fading away. People are looking more to principles and less to names. The voters of all parties are ready to discard "machine" politics, and to enlighten themselves upon those great questions of governmental policy on which parties must divide in the near future.

As a local family newspaper the HERALD will continue to be the leading organ in the towns of Northern Lenawee. It will be a faithful mirror of the social and business life of this vicinity.

ITS SPECIAL FEATURES.

1. A full assortment of local news from its regular township and neighborhood correspondents.
2. A good story and other reading matter for the "Family Circle."
3. A department of "County News" gleaned from the county press.
4. A carefully edited department of "State News."
5. An original "Washington Letter" during each session of Congress.
6. A "Farmers' Page," which will be devoted to general agricultural news and the reports of all farmers' clubs within our jurisdiction.
7. A column of extracts each week from the leading independent and party newspapers.
8. A live local department, devoted specially to Tecumseh news, supplemented with an illustrated corner each week.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Our subscription rates for 1881 will be $1.50 per year, cash in advance.

PREMIUMS.

To each new subscriber receiving his paper at a post office in Lenawee county, who shall pay cash in advance for one year, we will give a premium receipt book, entitled "The Home Guide." This is one of the best family receipt books ever published, and is worth at retail fifty cents. Subscribers sending in their names at once will be credited to Jan. 1, 1882. They will get the remaining numbers for December free. Old subscribers will receive the "Home Guide" on the same terms as new ones, upon the payment of all arrears up to the present time.

The HERALD for one year, and Page's Map of Michigan, will be furnished for $2.00. The retail price of the map alone is $2.00.

This Map of Michigan is published by H. R. Page & Co., of Chicago, and is the best state Map in the market. It is 31 by 40 inches in size, mounted on rollers, contains a complete postoffice index, and every railroad in the state.

The HERALD for one year, and Webster's Pictorial Dictionary, will be furnished for $5.00, which is the price of the Dictionary alone.

This Dictionary contains 1040 pages and 600 engravings. It is rapidly taking the place of the unabridged, being just as good for ordinary use, and costing less than one-half as much.

These premiums will all be withdrawn on the first day of February next—Dec. 1st, 1880.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

RE-ASSEMBLING OF CONGRESS.

Its Present Political Complexion—Present from the Queen.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6, 1880.

Upon the reassembling of Congress on Monday three new members will take their seats, one to fill a vacancy caused by death and two to occupy seats made vacant by resignation. Mr. Hewitt, of Alabama, comes in place of Mr. Lewis, deceased, while Ezra B. Taylor, of Ohio, and Jonathan Scoville, of New York, will occupy the seats which General Garfield and Purgative Pellet Pierce resigned. Another vacancy has just been caused by the death of Evarts W. Farr, of New Hampshire, but that can scarcely be filled in time for the opening of the session. If every member were present there would be 292 Congressmen in their seats, but it would be a marvel if more than 250 answered to their names, and that is a great deal more than an average attendance during the session.

For the next Congress the returns from the back districts are now all in, and it can be definitely stated that the House will stand 153 Republicans to 140 Democrats—a clear Republican majority of 13. This estimate accounts for every member and places the few elected as Independents and Greenbackers where it is understood they will respectively vote on political questions. One striking feature of the new list that attracted my notice in looking it over is the many changes in the personnel of the next House. One hundred and four members who respond to their names in this Congress have been retired by the whirligig of time and the fortunes of war, to private life. In a very few cases the absent names will appear in other branches of the public service. Among the most prominent members of the present Congress who will not figure in the next are Senators Thurman, Eaton, McDonald, Sharon, Randolph, Wallace, Kernan, Withers and Bruce; and Representatives Samford, Lewis and Lowe, of Alabama; Davis, of California; Hawley, of Connecticut; Felton, of Georgia; Hayes and Fort, of Illinois; Bichnell, New, Hostetter, Baker and De La Matyr, of Indiana; Price, Weaver and Gillette, of Iowa; Thomas Turner, of Kentucky; Kimmel and Henkle, of Maryland; Loring and Claflin, of Massachusetts; Singleton, of Mississippi; Wells and Phillips, of Missouri; Clark, of New Jersey; Covert, Crittenden, Starin and Lonsbury, of New York; Davis and Steele, of North Carolina; McMahon, Hurd, Ewing, Warner, Monroe and Garfield, of Ohio; Clymer, Wright, Killinger, Coffroth and White, of Pennsylvania; Bright, of Tennessee; Goode, Johnson, Harris and Hunton, of Virginia; and Bouck, of Wisconsin. Some of these gentlemen declined a renomination, others were defeated in convention, while others yet got left at the polls. Whether the changes are to be for better or worse a little time will tell. The places of some of these men will be hard to fill, but they say that in such a body of great and good men as the United States Congress a few stars more or less can scarcely be missed. The thought is encouraging.

A writing table made from the timbers of the ship Resolute was recently received at the White House and has been noticed by many visitors. It is of oak and a magnificently carved piece of furniture. Upon one of the smooth panels is the following inscription: "H. M. S. Resolute, forming part of the expedition sent in search of Sir John Franklin, in 1852, was abandoned in latitude 74 degrees 41 minutes, longitude 101 degrees 22 minutes west, on the 15th of May, 1854. She was discovered and extricated in September, 1855, in latitude 67 degrees north, by Captain Buddington, of the U. S. whaler George Henry. The ship was purchased, fitted out and sent to England as a gift to her majesty Queen Victoria by the President and people of the United States as a token of good will and frendship.—This table was made from her timbers when she was broken up and is presented by the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland to the President of the United States as a memorial of the courtesy and living kindness which dictated the offer of the gift of the Resolute."

Mr. A. Watson, the inventor and introducer of the stamped newspaper wrappers, as well as the originater of many other valuable ideas in the economy and convenience of national business, suggests very pertinently that the permanent dissemination of population statistics is of very great importance. To materially aid in this it is suggested that all newspapers keep the population of the city or town where published standing permanently on the first page or on the editorial page, as: Washington, D. C., Population 180,000. If this was universally adopted, then wherever a newspaper is seen the population of the city or town where published would be known. This would be a benefit to the public generally. DON PEDRO.

THE LATE PROF. J. C. WATSON.

Among the many distinguished teachers and instructors of the University of Michigan, who have won world-wide fame and honor to themselves, and reputation to the University, few if any stand deservedly higher than the late Prof. Watson. His manifold discoveries of new planetoids and of comets, and his eminent ability as an astronomer and mathematician will forever make his name stand high in the ranks of his beloved profession.

Shortly after the discovery of the two satellites of Mars in August, 1877, John J. Adam, of this village, who was a personal friend and occasional correspondent of Prof. Watson, addressed a letter to him on the subject of the apparent anomaly in the motion of the inner satellite. We have just been shown his reply, and have the pleasure of laying it before our readers:

OBSERVATORY, ANN ARBOR, April 8, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR:—I intended before this to have acknowledged the receipt of your letter of the 13th ult., but on account of pressure of work and unavoidable interruptions my correspondence has fallen behind.

The short period of the inner satellite of Mars, 7h 38m, is certainly an anomaly, and if the nebular hypothesis is true, we shall be compelled to seek an explanation by supposing that it moves in a resisting medium (to be tested at the next return to visibility,) or that it is some comet or small planet which has been captured by Mars. I have intended to give some thought to this subject, but so far my other work in hand has rendered it impossible to do so.

I shall take great pleasure in communicating you any results at which I may arrive.

Yours very sincerely

JAMES C. WATSON.

HON. J. J. ADAM, Tecumseh.

Prof. Watson at the time of his death, and for some months previous, had been expending some thousands of dollars of his own means in erecting an addition to the Observatory of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, to enable him to make observations of the heavens in daylight as well as at night,—especially with a view to determine the existence and motions of his alleged intra-Mercurial planet Vulcan.

As to the inner satellite of Mars, Prof. Newcomb in his "Popular Astronomy," published in 1879, since the date of Prof. Watson's letter, gives the elements of 172 out of the 200 planetoids then discovered, stating the greatest and least distances of each from the sun, the mean distance and periodic time of each, from that of the shortest known period, being that of No. 149, Medusa, of 3 years and 44 days, to that of No. 153, Hilda, of 7 years and 314 days. These planetoids are all remarkable for their great eccentricity, owing to the powerful attraction of the giant planet Jupiter on one side and the minor influence of Mars on the other. The probability would seem to be that a small planetoid inside of any now known, at a time of its least distance from the sun, coincident with that of Mars' greatest distance was "captured by Mars" and converted into his inner satellite, as discovered in 1877. What if it be this other Neighbor who calls? What if the voice comes not from the refined, tasteful homes where we are wont to seek our friends, not from the pleasant places of life, or from those whose friendship is a joy and delight to us, but from the hedges and bypaths, from the lips of those whom sin has marked with its deep pollution, and who long for some place where they may hide from accusing conscience? What if from the lowly ones, who can give little in return for the much that must be given them? If we be neighbor to God, must not some of the loving kindness be shown in these places and to these sin-stained ones? Does He not call us through their pallid faces and outstretched hands? Are we good neighbors to God if we let their cry go unheeded? We are not wont to look for our Christ in such lives; but He has said: "Inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it unto me." How to Get Rich.

The great secret of obtaining riches, is first to practice economy, and as good old "Deacon Snyder," says, "It used to worry the life out of me to pay enormous doctor's bills, but now I have "struck it rich." Health and happiness reign supreme in our little household, and all simply because we use no other medicine but Electric Bitters and only costs fifty cents a bottle. Sold by C. The oldest timber in the world, which has been used by man, is supposed to be that found in the ancient temples of Egypt. It is found in the dowelpins in connection with stone work which is known to be at least 4,000 years old. These dowels appear to be of tamarisk or shittim-wood, of which the ark is said to have been constructed, a sacred tree in ancient Egypt, and now rarely found in the valley of the Nile.

A Grand Reputation.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

HINTS FOR DECEMBER WORK.

From the American Agriculturist, Dec. 1.

The days grow shorter, and reach their shortest equation, while the evenings are longer and longer. The time is favorable for looking backward in thought. Fore-thoughts are good in their time, but after thoughts, though often less honored, are worth a great deal more for shaping the future.

LIVE STOCK.—As the season advances the live stock require increased attention; not only are they more directly dependent upon our care, but they are subject to discomforts from exposure, which seriously interfere with the profit of keeping them. Of all our domestic animals the pig is the most sensitive to exposure to rough weather, poultry next, in this order: fowls, ducks, geese, and turkeys, the last often doing better when exposed than if sheltered. Next to fowls, cows, then, working oxen and young cattle; next horses, which are used, unused horses, and sheep. Of these last the long-wool breeds are most sensitive to cold storms and snow, but close-fleeced breeds will stand almost any am't of cold if they have enough to eat, sheds to go under, and shelter from driving storms of rain and snow.

HORSES, if well fed, usually feel bright and lively in winter, and young horses are, for this very reason, more easily trained than when the weather and running at pasture makes them dull. Whenever horses are used so as to warm them up at all, blanket them as soon as they stand still, if only for two or three minutes, those two or three minutes are sometimes enough to give a chill, which may end in pneumonia, or other serious troubles. Grooming saves feed, and also promotes health in horses, and should never be neglected. It will probably pay even to groom boarding horses, and it will certainly pay the owners to stipulate that their horses should be groomed daily. Blankets, except mere "dusters," are worse than useless in stables; they make the horse tender, and more likely to take cold when brought in hot. Litter very freely if you have the material; straw, leaves, swamp hay, etc.

MILCH COWS.—These ought to be well fed, and cleaned by a card and brush, daily, if possible, otherwise twice a week. They should be milked up to within four weeks of calving. It is a great temptation to dry off a cow to save the labor of milking, and not alone will hired men do this, but the farmers themselves, generally, do it, and think that they save a good deal in feed and labor, while in reality, with young cows, they impart a habit of going dry early, which will last them as long as they live. The better milch cows are fed, the better return they give, but feed judiciously.

SHEEP are peculiarly sensitive to good treatment. A good shepherd is always gentle among his sheep. Ewes which are to lamb early ought to be by themselves and have better care as their time approaches. Feed a few more turnips and give them a little more liberal sprinkling of corn meal and bran, or oil cake.

PIGS.—Nearly double the feed will be required to keep pigs from going back, after really cold weather comes on—say, when the ground freezes. It is then best to kill at once. Every farmer ought to be able to kill and cut up his own pigs. Butchers are often very rough and brutal. This is not necessary. Many a farmer who kills his own pigs does so because he wants the job kindly and humanely done. He actually thrusts the knife as if he loved the victim. Feed soaked corn, that is, corn which is covered with as much boiling water as it will take up in 24 hours. This is better for either fattening or store pigs than coarse meal, unless the latter be thoroughly cooked.

POULTRY.—Hens will lay up to Christmas, if they have warm quarters A manure shed, where mixed manure throws off considerable warmth, and which is closed in, but well ventilated, is an excellent place for fowls. They are kept warm and comfortable, their droppings are all saved, going to enrich the manure, and they keep on laying, often all winter. At noon feed, in open weather, soft food—that is, boiled potatoes mixed with bran and corn-meal, or something of the kind; at night give a good feed of whole grain, throwing down enough to toll them off the roost for an early breakfast, unless thereby you will be feeding an army of rats all night. In snowy and frozen weather, feed three times a day, and give only what they will run after at each meal.

The ice crop in every section of the country is becoming more and more important. The season may be as unfavorable for ice as the last, but that is hardly possible. Nevertheless, a prudent man will be prepared to lay in his ice as soon as it shall have attained half the usual thickness, or even less. The probabilities are that an enormous quantity will be secured this season. It is being applied to new uses all the time, and its consumption in both town and country is greatly on the increase.

APPLES.—This has been a great apple year, and immense quantities have been shipped to various parts of Europe. This trade is now so well established that in planting, the American orchardist should have the foreign demand in view. Apples for shipping should be those that bear transportation, and also those that are in favor abroad, such as the Newtown Pippin, Spitzenberg, Baldwin, etc.

FRUIT IN THE CELLAR.—When the fruit cellar is separate from the house it should be kept just above the freezing point; such cellars do not require ventilation. Cellars under living-rooms must be ventilated, otherwise the gases given off while the fruit is ripening—and too frequently decaying—will endanger the health of the inmates. There is a demand for special care in this matter, at the present time, because the fruit has been so abundant that there is an unusually large am't stored in the cellars. If the house is so constructed that an opening can be made from the cellar into a chimney, ventilation may be very complete; an opening which can be closed at pleasure should be made to admit air from without when desirable.

MANURES.—By many the orchard is expected to yield two crops—one from the trees, and another more directly from the soil, as it may seem. It is useless to expect the best fruit from trees that are robbed of their nutriment by quick growing crops. Ordinarily, when the trees come into bearing, they should have the land to themselves. If circumstances make it necessary to grow some crop between the trees, both the crop and the trees should be manured. Well rotted manure is best, and when spread let it cover the whole ground and not be heaped about the trunks of the trees where there are no small roots to make use of it. Winter is an excellent time to spread the manure, as it can be drawn upon sleds which more readily pass under and among low trees than a wagon. A dressing of lime will often be of great benefit to an orchard.

Many plants are killed by too much protection. For example, strawberries are hardy, and the covering of straw, marsh hay, etc., that is recommended for them is not so much to shield from cold as to prevent frequent freezing and thawing of the soil. The covering should be mainly around and not upon the plants.

Shrubs that are not quite hardy do not require bundling up, as was thought necessary not many years ago, when more plants were smothered than benefited by the covering. A little brush, or better, some evergreen boughs placed close to the shrub will ward off the severe winds, modify sudden changes of temperature, and be a sufficient protection. Tender raspberries must be bent down, and covered with earth before freezing prevents it.

THE WHEAT CENTER.

From the census returns made to the Department of Agriculture, we learn that the center of production of this important cereal crop is gradually moving westward. In 1850 it was in Eastern Ohio. The center is now not far from Madison, Wis. A writer in the Inter-Ocean says that "the West now produces eight times its former percentage, while the middle section which for a time increased its percentage, has now lost more than it gained, and that the Atlantic coast has sacrificed two-thirds of its former proportion." and that "the Eastern, North, Middle and Southern groups do not supply their home demand; the South Middle States have a small surplus, the Ohio Valley consume about half their production, while the more western groups produce three times the home consumption."

The area in wheat along the line of the Northern Pacific railroad this year is estimated at 10,000,000 acres against 6,000,000 last year. A yield of twenty bushels per acre would make 200,000,000 bushels the crop of that region.

Piles of 12 Years Standing Cured.

GEORGIA, VT., Sept. 16.

I am glad to say a word that will encourage any person that may be suffering as I did for twelve years from Piles, to give Kidney-Wort a trial. After suffering, as none but those who have been thus afflicted can realize, and trying various remedies prescribed by regular physicians, I was persuaded to buy four packages of Kidney-Wort. This was about eighteen months ago; and after using only one and a half packages I was cured. I have not since felt the need of more, but for fear I shall, I would not part with the balance of it on any account, if I supposed there would be any uncertainty of getting more.

J. F. Newcomer, of Toledo, Ohio, says:—I have been greatly benefited by wearing an Excelsior Kidney Pad, and would recommend all persons troubled with weak kidneys to try it. —See Adv.

A Michigan farmer heard that music would prevent bees from stinging, and he took his accordeon and went out and sat down by the hive. Only forty-four bees had got a shew at him when he jumped into a lake.

Plow-Farming.

The farmer who devotes his time principally to the plow, that is, breaking up the land, raising grain, and other tilled annual crops, such as require the constant use of the plow, harrow and hoe, will die a poor man,—particularly if he pursues this system steadily through a long series of years. There is no system so laborious as plow-farming. There is no other returns so small a profit.

Diversified farming is more interesting, more educating, refining, and more profitable, pecuniarily, than the drudgery of plow-farming. Variety in agriculture, as in every other department of life, is more interesting because less laborious and monotonous.

In order to keep the farm up to its highest productive capacity, as small an area should be in crops requiring the constant use of the plow and harrow as is compatible with the greatest yield per acre and the allotted time to be devoted to the care of each crop. There should never be such an extent of any one crop as would trespass upon the time necessary to devote to others equally important in their season. Plowing too much land is the rock on which many industrious farmers are stranded. Other important work on the farm has to be neglected, the labor becomes excessive, and the burthens of the farmer and his family are simply an oppression which even a galley-slave should not be subjected to. It is this mistaken practice which wears the life out of many farmers, bringing on premature age, discouraging his sons, making a slave of his wife, and the whole life on the farm a mere existence without rest, recreation or enjoyment. To grow rich, to make money, is the declared object of these unnatural sacrifices; and yet no man ever grew rich by such a course, while it has impoverished thousands, and left them with exhausted lands, and rude, comfortless homes.

Where farm-work is a steady drag with the effort to cultivate more acres than the force under the control of the farmer can accomplish in season, and perform with thoroughness, the land is never made to do its best, and the returns are generally far from profitable. And when everything is staked on a single crop, failure is sure to be disastrously often.

Poultry Habits.

Of all farm stock, hens are the most easily taught. The education of hens can be commenced at any age; but best while young. They should be housed and shut in every night, and not allowed to roost on sheds, well sweeps, or trees; even a neglect to shut the door on them for one night will cause the timid ones to seek a higher roost the next night, and they can only be found out-of-doors. This leads to laying out of doors—a great nuisance—and to constant loss from roving night enemies. At sunrise every morning call the chickens all around you, and scatter a full feed for them; let this always be done on the same spot of ground. Keep, in a convenient place, a reservoir of fresh clear water, if you have no running stream. At certain and regular times in the day, you will find the whole flock there. Throw no scrap of food around the dwelling, or you will teach them to become a house nuisance. Burn all the egg shells, or you will teach the hens to eat eggs in the nests. If you coop your chicks, take hen and brood to the hen house as soon as the coop is dispensed with; otherwise you will have to spend hours every night for a week before they will house well. Protect hens while setting, by a light board or lattice cover to the nest, so they shall not be annoyed by other hens wishing to lay with them. In fact, any bad habit or any habit that does not suit your surroundings may be entirely broken up and changed by reasonable preventative measures.

Poultry Vermin.

There are many recipes for driving vermin away from poultry and houses. The inventors of these are shrewd; they know that people are naturally indolent in both body and mind; that they never guard against invasion, but wait until the enemy is upon them, and then buy up all the new-fangled nostrums, kill all the lice, and half kill all the hens and chickens, and at once begin to do some tall crowing. All poultry vermin delight in moist or damp places; in fact, they can't live any where else. That's the principle. Now what does it suggest? Why, the suggestion is obvious; don't have any damp places' and that means a dry chicken house, a dry earth floor, a dry roof, no manure allowed to accumulate on the floor or under the perches, because that is always damp, and absorbs dampness from the air. Build two chicken houses, one in a low, damp, ill ventilated place, and the other on a high, dry, sunny, airy spot, and let your flock choose; the most miserable old hen "that ever was" knows better what she wants than the most dignified, dandyish, intellectually refined poultry fancier that the hen fever ever produced.

Remember! a water-tight house, a ground or sandy floor, plenty of sunlight and fresh air, and your children will have to go to college to learn the etomology of the hen-house, instead of brushing vermin off of every egg they bring to the housekeeper.

Late chicks may be made more profitable than early ones. Chickens from eggs set in August and September may be kept warm in a tight glazed house, and fed so that they will grow continually through the winter, and if they come later all the better, if they are well kept and fed, the earlier broods will be salable at good prices when the market is bare of chickens, and the later ones will furnish spring chickens long before the usual supply comes to hand. Chickens hatched in the fall or winter are comparatively rare, but are known to a few persons, who have made the discovery that, with good feed, warm quarters, a warm mess at least once a day, warm drink and cleanliness, there is no difficulty at all about raising them, and at a good profit.—Agriculturist.

It don't pay to sow or plant poor seed because you happen to have it on hand.

It don't pay to plant more ground than you can manure and take good care of.

It don't pay to leave weak places in the fences, in hopes that the cattle won't find them.

Nor does it pay to leave the work of mending your tools and selecting and securing your seed until the day you want to use them, thereby causing costly delay.

MRS. ELIZABETH ANDREW JACKSON JONES:—"Now this looks like business. A grand Woman's Convention will be held in Washington, and Congress will be compelled to give us our rights. Why shouldn't women have the privilege of running the machine, lobbying in Congress, and getting rich out of office, same as the men? Yes, we propose to have our rights, if we have to fight for them."

"Bucket Shops."

As many of our readers do not know what a "bucket shop" is, we clip the following from the Chicago Inter Ocean. It tells the whole story:

Let us now enter one of these shops and watch the proceedings for a few moments. We will take one opening on Clark street as a sample. On the outside we observe the words, "Chicago Grain and Stock Exchange," but it is a genuine bucket shop for all that. We find the place filled with a surging, seething, eager crowd of operators. Some are young men, some are old, some are well dressed and dandified in appearance, and others comparatively poor and shabby. Some are standing up, others sitting in chairs, which are arranged in long rows facing the blackboards; some swearing and spitting tobacco juice on the floor, others pleasantly smoking and chatting in groups; others still, silent isolated and anxious. Before the blackboards, on a raised platform, is a telegraph operator and a marker. As the quotations come in from the halls of the chamber of commerce every few seconds, they are called off in a loud voice, then put on the board, and also in a book which is kept by a man at the clicking instrument. This is for the grain and provision department of the concern. On the other blackboards are placed the stock quotations which come direct from New York, and not quite as frequently. Behind the desks stand a lot of clerks, keeping an account of the transactions, and working away like beavers. Quite an elaborate process of book-keeping is indulged in, that no blunders may be made, and it sometimes requires several hours to so straighten matters out inside that a successful operator can get his money after closing his deal. Money is changing hands rapidly and constantly during the hours of business, and at the close some go away smiling and happy, having been successful in winning a few dollars, others depart morose and mad on account of alleged ill-luck and losses.

The fascination of this game of chance is absolutely terrific and enthralling. When the markets are lively and fluctuations are rapid, a man can double his money in a few minutes or lose it altogether. The bank generally deals openly with its customers, and gives them every opportunity for investing to their hearts' content, well knowing that their victims will guess wrong three times where they will hit it twice, taking the transactions of the day through. The bank can well afford to allow the operators full liberty in trading, and profit only by their mistakes. Such is the unqualifiedly total depravity of inanimate things, as well as persons, that every advantage may be given to a man to guess right, and then, in spite of experience, observation, and their best endeavors, they will inevitably guess wrong and lose five times where they gain three, taking the week or month through. A man goes into one of these bucket shops, makes a venture, becomes elated and excited, visions of untold wealth dancing before his mind's eye. He goes on, very soon gets "stuck" in some unfortunate deal, his money slips away from him before he knows it, he grows desperate, advances large sums, led on in the hope of getting back his losses, and generally keeps the game up until he finds himself "clean scooped out," when he is forced to quit or raise more money. This is the general experience of hundreds upon hundreds of poor fellows who have gone into these gambling dens buoyant and hopeful, and have come out penniless, disheartened and wretched.

It may be asked: "Does not any one make money by speculating?" and the answer is: Yes, a few are successful, and carry away handsome sums, but in the long run ninety-five out of every one hundred who follow it steadily lose more than they make. Some days will be field days for the operators, other days will be "Black Fridays" for them. The markets are so changeable, the influence that moves them up and down so occult and capricious, that no person can tell what an hour may bring forth. Every move is emphatically a move in the dark; you may strike terra firma and you may go down into the pit.

Every one having any considerable amount of experience in these shops will declare that the business as a whole is demoralizing and damning in every respect. It unfits a man for regular and steady work. It uses a man up nervously and mentally. It breaks up the very foundation of honor, honesty and integrity in his character. It makes him irritable, peevish and reckless in his habits. It leads to drinking, swearing, and a score of allied vices. The agony of soul which a person, losing money in these games of hazard, experiences leads him to curse God, himself, the markets, and every thing else. It drives men to the verge of insanity. It makes men act more like maniacs than rational and intelligent human beings. The very fact that the business is entirely respectable and legal, and that very good Christian persons are engaged in it, only adds fuel to the flame. If the whole business was outlawed and illegal, there would not be half the danger in it. Morally and financially considered, the worst spot in Chicago is that square bounded by Washington street on the the north, Clark street on the east, Madison on the south, and La Salle on the west.

The world moves. The New York Graphic, speaking of the walking-match in that city, says:

"Twenty-five years ago a negro would not have been allowed to contend in the athletic arena with a dozen white men. Now, Mr. Hart, the Haytien-Massachusetts Ethiopian, wins the admiration of thousands for his pluck and fine action; his tent is covered with floral offerings, from the white as well as from his own race; he is driven from the Garden to a stylish hotel in a carriage, another following with his white friends; the term "nigger" was not heard in the six-day crowd, and his backer and trainer was a distinguished Irishman."

Which latter fact proves that a common interest will produce very singular results—as singular as the mixing of oil and water.

Only Once!

A great king, desiring to teach his son a practical lesson, ordered a long table to be prepared in one of the galleries of his palace, set out with all manner of toys, fruits and other things which he thought would please the little boy. Taking him to a door at one end of the room, he said to him, "My son, pass down this hall, and whatever you are pleased with, you may take for your own, on one condition—you are not to turn back. When you have gone the whole length of the table, and have made your decision, go out at the other door, and bring me what you have chosen."

Joyfully the little boy started, enchanted with the prospect; he ate and drank, and gathered his hands and his arms full of treasures, and presently tiring of what he had, he threw them away to make room for some glittering toy which attracted him farther on; but which, when secured, somehow did not please nor satisfy him as much as he had expected, and he was constantly looking back regretfully to that which he had left behind, or he saw something still further on which he thought more desirable. Now, instead of being happy in having his choice of all these good things, the little boy grew irritable and dissatisfied. At length he appeared before the king with a sorrowful countenance, and in his hands was a few broken toys.

"Is this all, my son, that [illegible] brought me out of the infin[illegible] from which you had to choose[illegible]

"Yes, father," sobbed the w[illegible]ing boy, "that which pleased me at first seemed so poor and inferior, when I had them, to that which I saw further on, that I could not be content, and always hoping to secure something to please me better, I could not make my choice, and now these are all I have. Oh, if I might go back once more!"

"Not so, my son," said the king, that cannot be; but let this lesson sink deep in your heart. As you go through life, enjoy each day all there is in it of pleasure and happiness. Do not look back with vain regrets, nor live in anticipation of future joys, oblivious of those which are within your reach. Let each day bring its measure of comfort and cheer. The present is all that you are ever sure of; by wisely improving it your memories of the past will be pleasant, and your future happiness will be assured."

A New Elastic Gum.

A rival to India-rubber and gutta-percha has been found in a new elastic gum which has been named Balata. This is the milky sap of the bully-tree that flourishes on the banks of the Orinoco and the Amazon in South America. The operation of winning the gum is similar in every respect to that employed with caoutchouc and gutta-percha. It resembles gutta-percha so closely in its general properties that much of it is shipped from Guiana and sold yearly for gutta-percha, although it has many points of superiority. It is tasteless, gives an agreeable odor on being warmed, may be cut like gutta-percha, is tough and leathery, is remarkably flexible and far more elastic than gutta-percha. It becomes soft, and may be joined piece to piece, like gutta-percha, at about 120 degrees Fahrenheit, but requires 280 degrees Fahrenheit before melting (higher than gutta-percha). It is completely soluble in benzole and carbon bisulphide in the cold. Turpentine dissolves it with the application of heat, while it is only partially soluble in anhydrous alcohol and ether. It becomes strongly electrified by friction, and is a better insulator of heat and electricity than gutta-percha, on which account it may find considerable application for electrical and telegraphic uses. Caustic alkalies and concentrated sulphuric and nitric acids do not attack it; but concentrated sulphuric and nitric acids attack it as they do gutta-percha, which it closely resembles in all other properties.

A well known New York chemist assured a World reporter the other day that it could not be long at this rate when people who use much sugar will be supplied with a tin lining to their stomachs. He exhibited to the reporter several thin sheets of tin which he had extracted from sugar. He said that some of the adulterators bought tin by the ton. It is cut with muriatic acid, and used in both sugars and syrups. He also exhibited examples of glucose, of which twenty-five to thirty per cent. is used in sugars and seventy-five per cent. in syrups. Poor starch and flour are also used. These adulterated sugars produce skin diseases.

EXTREME SELFISHNESS.—In Hungary no town of note would care to exist without its own peculiar hangman. A criminal might live without even the clergyman, but how could he possibly die without the executioner? It once happened, we are told, that the inhabitants of Kesmarkt sent to the authorities of Lutsitan begging the loan of their hangman. "We'll do nothing of the sort," said the indignant magistrates to the messenger, "Go back and tell your masters that we keep our hangman for ourselves and our children, and not for the people of Kesmarkt."

Combustion from Steam Pipes.

It is usually regarded as impossible for a steam pipe to set fire to wood. In a Pittsburg steel works, a steam pipe 2½ inches in diameter, carrying from 90 to 100 pounds pressure, was laid underground, encased in common pipe boards about one inch thick. After three years of use, occasion was had to dig up the pipe, and the whole length of the wooden drain was found to be charred, and apparently burnt, about three-fourths of the thickness of the wood, the other fourth being partially rotted. The whole inside of the drain was turned to charcoal, with here and there spots of white ashes, showing that ignition had actually taken place. It seems probable that if the casing had not been excluded from the air by the earth covering, it would have blazed and been entirely consumed.

NAUGHTY LITTLE BOY, ASLEEP.

Just now I walked from hall and state
A joyful circle, that had gathered
Its harmonies with thankful trust
While tells the world my entire care.

And little, barefoot on the floor
Went tiptoe, I and stole my pet,
Forgetting theme, and interested, then
Stole softly to the nursery door.

And there he lay, his shining curls
Filled with the trifles he had worked,
As sleep had caught him in the act,
And bound his tumbling feet and pains.

A broken vase, a tattered book,
Still testified his deep disgrace!
I stooped and kissed his sleeping face,
Bright with some heavenly far out-look.

Perhaps 'twas wrong, but half-beguiled,
I trusted when my last long sleep
Should come, there might be One who'd keep
An equal mercy for His child.

A more glorious victory cannot be gained over another man than this, that when the injury began on his part, the kindness should begin on ours.

Precept and example, like the blades of a pair of scissors, are admirably adapted to their end when conjoined; separated, they lose the greater portion of their utility.

No man starts in his professional career wise, strong and thoroughly fitted for his work. One must gain wisdom by experience, strength by exercise, and fitness by reiterated, and at first often ineffectual, endeavor.

THE DARKEST HOUR.—Horace Greeley never said a more truthful thing than when he declared "that the darkest hour in the history of any young man is when he sits down to study how to get money without honestly earning it."

BANK OF ENGLAND.—The Bank of England was started in 1694, with a capital of £1,200,000. A century ago, in 1778, its notes in circulation amounted to £7,000,000; now they exceed £39,000,000—and the bullion has increased from £2,000,000 to £24,000,000, or $120,000,000.

HINTS.—Ask no woman her age. Never joke with a policeman. Do not play at chess with a widow. Never contradict a man who stutters. Be civil to rich uncles and aunts. Your old hat, of course, for an evening party. Always sit next the carver, if you can, at dinner.

Only one of the big trees of California has been felled by the hand of a man. To accomplish this it required the work of five men or twenty-two days, not chopping, but with long augers, boring it down. After the tree was completely severed, the veteran stood still unmoved, refusing to fall, until by ropes, pulleys and wedges the enormous trunk was brought to the earth. This tree was found to be over 800 feet long, ninety-six feet in circumference at the base and sound to the very heart.

Lo! the Poor Indian.

Lo! the poor Indian! When he goes home to his cheerless wigwam in the evening he has no dime novel with which to while away the weary hours; no friend next door to come in and talk politics; no medical almanacs to read; no New York papers with full proceedings of the racy Vanderbilt will case; no money in a safe for masked robbers to break in and steal—no civilized pleasures of this kind. He simply hangs up the bloody scalps he has captured during the day, beats his squaw with a club, wraps a buffalo robe around him and lays down to pleasant dreams. If a pale face comes within half a mile of his wigwam, the slumbering red man snuffs him afar, awakes, and goes out and shoots him full of arrows.

What Constitute Personal Attractions.

Every person is interesting in proportion as he excites or secures our sympathy; as we feel that there is no need of playing a part or of echoing lies; as we feel that in his presence we can afford that most delicious of luxuries, unlimited freedom. This feeling is generally partial; it can very seldom be entire. But as it is more or less, interest grows or diminishes. When it is nearly full, it is friendship with man and love with woman in the highest sense. When it is moderate it determines our associates, our companies as they commonly are, who are often interesting by turns, and to endure whom is the best most of us can do. Flashes of sympathy we get from a number of our acquaintances, for they are all human sometimes, even the worst of them; but we could not think of calling them interesting save on occasion or under given conditions.

Inherent interestingness is disclosed involuntarily and often as clearly in a single phrase or a small act as in importancies. Who has not sometimes observed and felt it in an entire stranger speaking of the weather, or performing a trifling courtesy? Something in his tone or facial expression or gesture or suavity reveals his quality; individualizes him, touches the common chord of humanity. He makes an impression positive and distinct; you remember him; you want to know more of him, and if you do, you find your intellectual curiosity well warranted.

Among a number of women you meet comely ciphers, finely-dressed conversationalists; you are not disappointed, for you expect nothing. As you move mechanically about to the slow tune of conformity and repetition, you hear a few words which, worn as they are, contain vitality. You look to their source, and you say, "This is a genuine woman!" and if opportunity favor, your opinion will be verified. She is one of the interesting class, not handsome, perhaps, nor intellectual, but a unit, with a force and favor of her own. You think you have made a discovery, and you have for yourself, though many have before you. A really interesting woman cannot hide herself in society, whose triteness serves to set her off. She has plenty of earnest admirers, and those are for the most part her friends, who, while they know the fact, cannot quite understand why she should be so different from her set. She attracts her own as well as the other sex, and her praises are chanted on every hand. She is called lovely, fascinating, wonderful; she is merely interesting; but to be so is rare enough to explain, if not to justify, exaggeration.

The memory retains many interesting persons who have similarly suggested themselves, and then vanished, as if to tantalize us with recollections of what we might have enjoyed. The dearest friends are often those we fail through circumstances to secure. They that we ought to have known passed us on the Giudecca while we were first in Venice, or quitted the Parthenon just as we came up. When we are ascending the Nile they are going back; when we are in Bagdad they are in Boston. It may be kind of Fate to keep us away from the interesting souls we struggle toward; they are great derangers of established order and humdrum satisfaction. To know a very few of these at intervals is sufficient, since each one gives and demands so much that to have the number we crave might tangle the proprieties.

They who interest us may not be interested in turn; they whom we interest may not be interesting to us. The opinion that interestingness is reciprocal springs from desire, not from truth. It ought not to be so, and therefore it is not. Interestingness implies individuality, breadth, spontaneousness, superiority, and to it are frequently drawn, by a natural law, persons, who lack these very traits. It is the need, the cravings of the weak for the strong, of the restless for the calm, of the neglected for the favored. One sided attractions are common everywhere and out of them grow the spiritual tragedies of life. The interesting man or woman is constantly drawing men and women whose nature it is to be drawn, but never to draw.

The Dog as an Article of Food.

By most people the dog is valued only during life; his skin is not particularly valuable, and his flesh is but little esteemed. This is by no means, however, the case everywhere. It is very well known that the Chinese use the dog as a regular article of food. Many of the North American tribes look upon an entree of dog as the greatest possible delicacy they can set before a stranger. Sir Leopold McClintock relates that in the Sandwich Islands he had the most profuse apologies offered to him because there was no puppy to be had for a feast to which he was invited. The Esquimaux, too, look upon a dish of young dog as a great treat, and it is related that a Danish captain provided his friends with a feast of this kind, and when they praised his mutton, sent for the skin of the beast and exhibited it to them! The Greeks and Romans also used the dog as an article of diet, and many ancient writers, such as Galen and Hippocrates, represent dog meat as a highly desirable dish.

William Buckley, a British soldier, convicted of receiving stolen property, or of being concerned in an attempt upon the life of the Duke of Kent, was sentenced to transportation to Australia for life. He escaped, and fell in with a tribe of natives, with whom he resided thirty-three years without meeting a white man until he discovered a party of tourists, and saved them from a treacherous attack by a wandering band of native warriors. It is believed that he owed his safety to his gigantic size and ferocious appearance. A more romantic explanation is that, having taken a spear from the grave of a dead chief, he was supposed by the natives to be their leader come back to life in a new body. Buckley says that these people imagined the world was supported by props, which were in charge of a man who lived at the extremity of the earth, and that unless the props were renewed from time to time, the whole fabric would tumble to pieces.

A RARE MUSICAL TREAT.

Tecumseh people are about to be favored with a visit from Donavin's Original Company of Tennesseeans, the Colored Concert Company that assisted in building Central Tennessee College at Nashville. It turns out to be a fact, on examination of the credentials carried by Mr. Donavin, that all other colored troupes were imitators, and very poor ones, too, of this, the only genuine company of Tennesseeans. It seems that to avoid prosecution these other managers used the words "Tennessee Jubilee Singers," rather than Original Tennesseeans. They were "Jubilee Singers" and that only, while this company are cultivated, thorough vocalists, and give a legitimate and varied concert program. We call attention to these facts because our people have been humbugged several times. Those who will notice their elegant printing and their many testimonials of a high character, will not doubt their genuineness.

They appear in Tecumseh Dec. 23d.

Adrian Times: On Saturday Theodore Buhl, president; F. J. Hecker, manager, and R. A. Alger and Willis Walker, directors of the Peninsular car company, were here looking over their property. With them was manager Bissell, of the Pullman works, Detroit. The gentlemen were highly pleased with their purchase here. It is rumored they desire to purchase more land. They ought to be able to buy it cheap enough.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

Last Friday evening, a very pleasant event occurred at the Baptist parsonage of this village. Some seventy-five or eighty of the Baptist church and congregation had planned a surprise for their pastor and wife. Just as the clock had struck seven, the door bell rang. It was responded to by the unsuspecting pastor; when the door was opened, to his surprise and evident embarrassment, men and women young men and maidens, baskets, pails, etc., etc., streamed in and streamed through. Shouts of laughter and hearty greetings told that the merriment was unbounded. Scarcely were the greetings over, when the pastor and wife were marched into the presence of the assembled throng, where in behalf of the surprising party, Mr. A. P. Coddington in a neat and affectionate address presented them with a beautiful silver tea set and cake basket, and on the cake basket were twenty-two silver dollars, twenty of them bearing the stamp of 1880.

The following is the address of Mr. Coddington:

BROTHER AND SISTER COMLEY:—These, our brothers and sisters who have assembled here to-night, have commissioned me with the important and pleasant duty of endeavoring to state to you some of the reasons which have prompted us to thus band ourselves together and come upon you "as a thief in the night," though for an entirely different purpose. It is now nearly three years since you came among us as our spiritual leader, and during that time we have observed with pleasure your readiness at all times, no matter how much to your own discomfort or inconvenience, to engage in every good work. Your zeal and devotion to the cause of the Master, your faithfulness to us in your constant efforts to instruct us in the way of life everlasting, to teach us the truths of holy writ, to cement us more closely together in the bonds of Christian love and to elevate us to a higher spiritual life, has won our admiration and esteem, and borne abundant fruit under the blessing of Divine Providence, in bringing many souls to Christ. In your anxieties, and perplexities and trials, (of which none can know but the faithful pastor and his companion), you may have thought us cold and indifferent toward you, and the cause to which you are so faithful. But let me assure you that this is not the case, and we have assembled here to-night to testify to you that we fully appreciate your valuable services and efforts for our advancement and in our behalf, and that you have a warm place in the heart of each and every one. You have not only our sympathy and affection as our beloved pastor, but as our brother and our sister. But no words of mine can convey to you the true sentiments of our hearts, as that would require the silvery tongue of an orator, and that our brothers and sisters knowing full well I did not possess, have endeavored to supply the deficiency with some of the substantial metal itself, and have provided themselves with this silver set and coin, which in their behalf, and as a further testimonial to you of their esteem and of their hearty endorsement of the sentiments I have expressed, I now present to you. Although of small intrinsic value may they be of inestimable worth in the assurance they convey to you of our confidence and love, in cheering you in your labors and in uniting us more closely together in the bonds of love to work for the Master. May your future be as bright as these pieces, and may this little acknowledgement of our appreciation of you (although tardy it has been) be instrumental in staying up your hands that the hosts of the Lord may prevail against his enemies."

After the presentation, the entire party sat down and enjoyed a bounteous repast.

The hour of midnight had almost arrived before the pastor and wife found themselves alone. Such occasions are among the bright spots in the memories of all who participated.

THE Home Lamp, which has been advertised in the HERALD, is certainly a very fine article, and well worth the price charged for it, which is $8.00 at retail. We have made arrangements whereby we can sell this lamp for $5, which is only a trifle above the wholesale rate. We will offer them at that figure to paid subscribers of the HERALD only during the month of December. Now is your time to get a beautiful lamp very cheap. A sample may be seen at the HERALD office.

ALVIN JOSLIN, will be here January 4th. He is funnier than ever, and will be sure to have a good house.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

UNSPOKEN LOVE.

In that love only blest
[illegible]
Or in the love not lost
That knows, but tells no cause,
Both souls together on hers,
Stronger it will not leave?
The souls' mighty silent
Never are the power lessened
It shall live only more
Within, knowing yet and sight
Or does it more replete
That shines to seek the light?
Shall wakeful but to sleep
Are the hidden hours by,
The little flowers that sleep
Live, though they seem to die.

Then keep my treasures still,
Hide in my secret breast,
Be open to no spell;
Unspoken love is best,
There souls shall speak to souls,
And hearts shall meet as hearts,
Without the formal motions,
Words, the worth impart.

GOOD MR. SPRUE.

"Hurry up there and get your tickets, gentlemen!" shouted a man in a blue coat and brass buttons, with the company's badge on his coat.

There was a general scramble for the head of the line, and a hurried falling back to less eligible places by those who failed to secure the first.

I never had any luck in grabbing a good place in a crowd. A tall man, with a high hat, always wound go in between me and whatever sight was to be seen. If it rained at the circus, the inevitable fat woman, with the green umbrella, always bounded my horizon. In the rush to hear a popular preacher, I have been fortunate enough to secure a camp stool at the far end of the aisle, but most commonly have had to put up with "standing room" in the third or fourth rank, catching here and there a word of the discourse, but not a glimmer of the sense.

This time I fared as usual. Elbowed out at every attempt to gain a better lodgment, I found myself at last at the extreme end of the queue.

"Hurry up, I say!" kept shouting he in brass and blue.

But in spite of all the line shortened slowly. I was getting nervous. The next day was Thanksgiving, which I had agreed to spend at Deacon Patchen's, between whose daughter Polly and myself certain tender negotiations were in progress. To miss the train involved the choice of either giving up my visit or waiting several hours and arriving just in time to find Polly in the pouts and taking a longing look at the cold remains of that especial turkey of whose growth in Indiana Polly's postscripts had kept me from time to time advised.

"Hurry up!—less than a minute till the gate closes!" admonished the blue and brass official, as at last I reached the ticket window.

"Ticket for Higginsport," I said, hurriedly.

"Two dollars!" replied the ticket man, stamping down his stamp on a piece of cardboard with the heel of his hand.

"I have lost my pocketbook," I exclaimed, withdrawing the hand sent in search of it.

Here was a fix! I had started with a liberal supply of the one thing needful for Thanksgiving—at least so far as material pleasures go—and here I was without a penny to pay my fare and not a minute of spare time.

I looked around helplessly.

"I perceive your embarrassment, sir," said a grave looking gentleman, whose white choker and a long-skirted coat left no doubt of his calling. "I perceive your embarrassment, sir, and shall be happy to relieve you of it. Get your ticket out of the—you can hand me the change, and remit the rest."

As he spoke he placed a twenty dollar bill in my hand.

"But, my dear sir," I began.

"Pray don't waste any time in compliments. My name is Rev. Speedwell Sprue, of Chapelton, to which address you can remit the trifling sum advanced. I ask no better guaranty than your countenance."

"I accept your favor," I replied, "with warmest thanks. My name is Hodiah Trimbley, white goods clerk with Twist & Bobbin, of this city."

"Come, sir, do you wish the ticket or not?" demanded the man at the window, with his thumb on the spring that held up the slide.

I threw down the bill. He hastily counted out the change and handed me it and the ticket. The former I passed to the stranger, whose hand I had barely time to press in parting, as I left him waiting for another train.

The gateman was in the act of closing the passage and the last bell was ringing as I hurried through and jumped aboard, with views of human nature considerable elevated by the trusting confidence shown by the Rev. Speedwell Sprue—though I doubted whether it would do to sell white goods on the same credit system.

From Mr. Sprue and his childlike faith my thoughts gradually turned to Polly Patchin, and I had already laid the ground plans of several fairy cottages, in which, with love and Polly to limit their choice, I could have laughed at the proudest prince in his palace.

"Dickersville!" sang out the conductor, as the whistle blew and the train slowed up at the first stopping place.

Two men with lanterns—it was a night train—came bustling through the car, searching the passengers closely.

"Ha! this looks like him," said one of them, flashing his lantern in my face.

"Fifty-five will exactly!" cried the other, glancing from me at a paper in his hand.

"Come, sir," he continued, placing a hand roughly on my shoulder. "If I am not mistaken it was you who bought the last ticket for this train."

"It was," I answered, looking up astonished.

"And paid for it with a twenty dollar bill," he added, "receiving the change."

I acknowledged the fact, but with no abatement of surprise.

"That bill," he proceeded, "was a counterfeit, and we've been telegraphed to arrest you."

I endeavored to expostulate, and explained as well as my confusion would permit the circumstances under which I got the note.

"A likely story!" was the sneering comment; "there's so many good Mr. Sprues you see going about lending money to total strangers. What did you do with the change, now?"

"Handed it back to Mr. Sprue," I answered.

"A clever dodge," said one of the men, as the train changed winks.

"Come along!" they commanded, and without further ceremony I was hustled from the train, dragged to a neighboring calaboose and locked up.

Next morning I was taken before a jolly-looking magistrate whose face was a guaranty that I should at least have a fair hearing.

"Well, young gentleman, what have you to say to this?" he began.

I was proceeding with my story earnestly when to my great joy who should enter but my kind friend, the Rev. Speedwell Sprue, in company with a stranger of very different appearance.

"Oh, Mr. Sprue, how glad I am to see you!" I exclaimed. "A word from you will clear up this unfortunate affair."

To my great chagrin Mr. Sprue, instead of promptly answering my appeal, turned aside and quite ignored my presence. But his companion promptly stepped forward.

"Do you recognize this?" he asked, placing in my hand an article taken from his pocket.

"I do!" I cried! "it's my own pocket-book."

"Of course you were robbed by that person," he replied, pointing to the Reverend Sprue, "whose real name is Ahab Dawks, a noted thief and forger, whom I've been for some time looking for. I witnessed his performance at the depot last night, and saw how after stealing your pocket-book, he made you the instrument of putting off a bad note that he might pocket the change. Though I'm a detective, I didn't interfere, wishing to follow Dawks to the den in which he works and keeps his tools, and knowing the worse that could happen, would be your temporary detention. This morning I hurried on, with the double purpose of securing your release and your identification of Mr. Dawks."

I was too late to see the turkey in his glory, but Polly—bless her!—had saved me a nice piece, and the story of my adventure was the event of that Thanksgiving night. Everybody laughed but Polly, who—again bless her!—was quite indignant at the wrongs which I had suffered.

SOUND MAXIMS.

Attend carefully to details of your business.

Be prompt in all things.

Consider well—then decide.

Dare to do right. Fear to do wrong.

Endure trials patiently.

Fight life's battle bravely, manfully.

Go not in the society of the vicious.

Hold integrity sacred.

Injure not another's reputation or business.

Join hands only with the virtuous.

Keep your mind from evil thoughts.

Lie not for any consideration.

Make few acquaintances.

Never try to appear what you are not.

Owe no man anything.

Pay your debts promptly.

Question not the veracity of a friend.

Respect the counsel of your parents.

Sacrifice money rather than principle.

Touch not, taste not, handle not intoxicating drinks.

Use your leisure time for improvement.

Venture not upon the threshold of wrong.

Watch carefully over your passions.

Extend to every one a kindly salutation.

Yield not to discouragements.

Zealously labor for the right.

Self-Reliance.

There is no element in a man's character that contributes more to his success in life, than confidence in himself. A man of self-reliance is invincible, all the world bows before him. Faith in the ability to win success, is more than half the battle. A man possessed of a hard, daring resolution will rage to contest to overcome his opponents, but will be determined to overcome them. If the contest be a right one, if he has faith that he is in earth, and is on duty, and when obstacles present themselves in their path, it only results in their putting forth a greater effort to accomplish their purpose.

This self-character, grown and danger may, environ and threaten to overthrow the most determined plans, yet over and above all, triumphs a heroic soul, will through and win fame and honor. The discouragements that would retard the irresolute only discover the weak places to the brave, and, strengthening these, they renew the conflict with increased vigor. Timidity creates cowards, and never wins success. It is a strong and abiding faith in one's own ability to perform that overcomes difficulties others thought could not be surmounted.

In all the pursuits of life we find that those who achieve honor and distinction are strong and self-reliant in their powers, exercise faith in their own ability, and carry out plans conceived in their own brain. Morse had faith in telegraph wires, and Field in submarine cables, and to-day, in consequence thereof, the lightning is harnessed to convey the news of the world in every part of the habitable globe within the compass of a few hours. Two young men in 1862 commenced a banking business in Wall street in a small office. They had faith in their ownability, and also that of the United States to pay its great war debt. To-day they are lending bankers in Government securities on this continent, their daily sales running into the millions, and their name and credit take high rank in all the financial centers of the world. Not many years ago Edison occupied an humble position as telegraph operator; to-day his name and fame are world-wide as associated with some of the greatest discoveries of ancient or modern times. Stewart, Astor and Vanderbilt furnish examples, in the large fortunes they created, as to what well-directed energy and determination can accomplish in business pursuits, while the eventful life of the late Judge Packer is another striking illustration of the high position that can be attained by reliance, perseverance on the individual man, backed by a liberal endowment of common sense. In the ever-widening paths of commerce and the ever-increasing monetary circles there open up to the young men of the nation rare opportunities to win wealth and fortune. In agricultural and mining, mechanical and mercantile pursuits, the manner to attain distinction are presented. But fortune will not come by chance, nor distinction by hazard; both must be won by strong, heroic endeavor. Backbone is vital to the achievement of lofty aims, and nerve and grit are essential requisites in the battle of life. A man, to triumph, must have faith in his enterprise and reliance in his ability.

A Hint to Boys.

A philosopher has said that the true education for boys is to teach them what they ought to know when they become men. What is it they ought to know?

1. To be true; to be genuine. No education will be worth anything that does not include this. A man had better not know how to read—he had better never learn a letter in the alphabet, and be true and genuine in intention and action, rather, than, being learned in all sciences and in all languages, be at the same time false at heart and also counterfeit in life. Above all things teach the boys that truth is more than riches, more than culture, more than earthly power or position.

2. To be true in thought, language and life—pure in mind and body. An impure man, young or old, poisoning society where he moves with his smutty stories and impure example, is a moral cholera, a plague spot, a leper, who ought to be treated as were the lepers of old, who were banished from society and compelled to cry "Unclean," as a warning to save others from the pestilence.

3. To be unselfish. To care for the feelings and comforts of others. To be polite. To be just in all dealings with others. To be generous, noble and manly. This will include a genuine reverence for the aged and things sacred.

4. To be self-reliant and self-helpful even from early childhood. To be industrious always, as we supposing at the earliest age. Teach them that all honest work is honorable, and that an idle, useless life of dependence on others is disgraceful.

When a boy has learned these things, when he has made these illess a part of his being, however young he may be, however poor or however rich, he has learned some of the important things he ought to know when he becomes a man. With these four properly mastered, it will be easy to find all the rest.

—Do not fail to price those elegant velvet frames at Kennedy & Stacy's, before making your holiday purchases.

Home Politeness.

A boy who is polite to his father and mother is likely to be polite to every one else.

A boy lacking politeness to his parents may have every semblance of courtesy in society, but is never truly polite in spirit; and is in danger as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy.

We are all in danger of living too much for the outside world, for the impression which we make in society, courting the good opinions of those who are in a sense a part of ourselves, and who will continue to sustain and be interested in us, notwithstanding these defects of deportment and character.

We say to every boy, and to every girl, cultivate the art of courtesy and propriety at home—in the sitting room and in the kitchen as well as in the parlor—and you will be sure in other places to deport yourselves in a becoming and attractive manner.

When one has a pleasant smile and demeanor, it is a satisfaction to know that these are not put on, but that they belong to the character, and are manifest at all times and under all circumstances.

THAT HORRID HAT.

A young wife recently went shopping, and among other things she bought new hat—a Derby, the first of the kind she had worn, and when her sister came in, looked at it very hard, and said to a friend, "How much that hat looks like my sister!" It occurred to a gentleman in the room that the wife had her sister on the mind also, upon hearing the remark, who was buried in an evening paper. He glanced in her and returned to his news. She sat near him, and after a while said, "Charley." He looked up, grinned, looked a little embarrassed, and again returned to his paper. When the train stopped she went up behind him, and said, "Charley." But he, the good boy, didn't even look around.—Then she touched his arm, and said in despair, "Charley, don't you know me? What is the matter?" At this he stopped, gazed at her steadily, and said: "I beg your—What! Oh, the deuce! Come, now! Is that you, Minnie! Why, what's come over you?" "I suppose it's this horrid, horrid hat. I'll take it off the minute I get home and never wear it again. Didn't you really know me, dear?" "Of course not. I thought it was that girl across the street trying to scrape acquaintance with me."

A Sea Wonder.

A monstrous submarine plant is growing in the North Pacific Ocean. It is one of the Melanospermas, and known to botanists as the Macrocystis Pyrifera, and is said to dwarf all vegetable products yet known by its prodigious proportions. It grows sometimes to such a size as to cover great areas of sea-bed, one specimen having been discovered that occupied by measurement three square miles, while the stem was eight feet thick. It is difficult to conceive of such a plant, and to understand how any adequate system of nourishment can be maintained through so extended channels. The microscopist leaves the famous big trees of California immeasurably behind, making them seem, indeed, like small reeds. It has an infinite variety, some specimens being so small as to be visible only under a powerful microscope. The much talked of wonders of nature are more wonderful than has ever been conjectured, as research and science are daily teaching us. And still it is fair to presume that we have not yet crossed the threshold of the temple of discovery within which are hidden marvels that the most active and exuberant imagination is unable to conceive. The realm of poetry is beautiful and inspiring; but the world of fact exceeds it in every way, illustrating constantly the old idea that truth is stranger than fiction. Indeed, fiction seems, even when most exaggerated, to be little more than the pale shadow of truth.

Physical Value of Singing.

Singing is one of the healthiest exercises in which men, women and children can engage. The Medical Wochenschrift, of St. Petersburg, has an article based upon exhaustive researches made by Professor Mosmann during the autumn of 1876, when he examined 212 singers ranging between the ages of nine and fifty-three. He laid chief weight upon the growth and absolute circumference of the chest, upon the comparative relation of the latter to the stature of the subject, and upon the pneumatometric and spirometric condition of the singer. It appears to be an ascertained fact from Dr. Mosmann's experiments that the relative, and even the absolute, circumference of the chest is greater among singers than among those who do not sing, and that it increases with the growth and age of the singer. The professor concludes that singing may be placed in the catalogue of the antidotes of consuming spirituous liquors, the latter hinders, while the former promotes.

A NEW PAYING OCCUPATION FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

The handsome Nickel Plated New Home Lamp being introduced to the public this season, is the most meritorious article ever offered Agents to make money with, is safer, and more convenient than the Student Lamp, which has heretofore had the reputation of being the Safest Lamp made. It has a clamp so firmly attach it to the Sewing Machine, Piano, Organ, Desk, etc. The fear of the ordinary lamp being accidentally upset or thrown from the table, is entirely relieved by this simple contrivance. It can be adjusted to throw the light just where it is wanted to suit the eyes, and can be converted into a handsome wall lamp. It has the best argand burner, a filling indicator, and convenient match box, and its price is within the reach of everyone. It has been fully tested and editorially endorsed by the "Western Christian Advocate," "Am. Christian Review," "Herald and Presbyter," "Journal and Messenger," and "Christian Standard," the leading Religious papers of Cincinnati, and is endorsed by the Mayor and Post-Master of Cincinnati, the Agent of the American Express Companies, as being the Safest, Most Convenient and best Lamp made.

There are three reasons why Agents should seek such an article to canvass for—first for its absolute safety and great convenience, it is needed in every home—second its low price makes its sale immense—third it will be a credit to handle such an article. One southern Agent writes, it sells faster than Gen. Lee's portrait sold right after the war, another writes it beats the palmy days of the Sewing Machine, its rapid sale, low price, and liberal terms surprise old Agents.—Address Home Lamp Co., Cincinnati, O. Mentioning our paper and they will give you full particulars and exclusive territory to canvass in.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—AND THE ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more for his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict, may be consulted at his office, St. Louis, Mo., until the 20th of December, after that at his New York office. Office address is in the St. Louis city newspapers.

Mr. B. F. George, Attorney at Law, Kent, Union Co. Iowa, treated by Dr. Sherman at his St. Louis office, writes: "Having used your Rupture treatment, and having been permanently cured, I have spoken highly of Rupture and recommend it to my friends."

Dr. Sherman is the discoverer of the only known cure for Rupture by local external treatment.

No man is safe who has a Rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is steadily progressive, even unto death, and he is wise who takes the necessary steps to be effectually relieved of it before the day of suffering and gloom comes upon him.

Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day. During treatment any kind of active exercise or labor can be performed without interfering with the treatment, and with safety from the dangers of strangulated Rupture. HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen, and merchants of his success in practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies. The afflicted should read it and inform themselves.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents.

AN INTERESTING CONTROVERSY.

The School Board of Hillsdale are just now indulging in the highly intellectual pastime of a political quarrel. The Board consists of three Republicans and three Greenbackers, and they have got into a tangle on the question of fuel. It is to be presumed of course that some momentous principle is at stake in this matter. Probably the Republican politicians on the Board insist upon honest fuel, while the Greenbackers demand flat fuel, and each side refuses to vote a dollar for fuel unless the right kind of fuel can be purchased. It would not only be immoral but outrageously unpatriotic to warm up the rising generation with fuel of a heterodox character. It were far better for the good little boys and girls to learn the location of the Gulf Stream with cold fingers and blue noses, than to yield an inch upon so vital a question as that of the right kind of fuel. The janitor of the schools is one of those old fogies who believe that he should keep the children warm as long as there is any fuel to build a fire with, and so he has recklessly burned up all the wood on hand. Some of the generous citizens of Hillsdale have stepped into the breach and offered to donate wood for the schools until the fuel question shall have been definitely decided by the local school authorities.

THE DOWNFALL OF JOHN KELLY.

No occurrence during the past political campaign created more commotion in political circles than the late overthrow of John Kelly. He has been for several years the representative par excellence of machine politics within the Democratic party in the great city of New York, and his signal overthrow will be hailed with delight by the friends of good government everywhere. His treachery to his own party defeated Gov. Robinson in New York last year, while his folly and treachery combined defeated Hancock for the Presidency last November. In fact, no one seems to regret his defeat except his own personal followers, and a few stalwart Republican newspapers. All honest men and opponents of machine politics, whatever their party label may be, will rejoice in the utter downfall of the "Boss." We predict that the coming twelve months will be an unfortunate one for machine politicians all over the country.

A NEW BOOK.

A new subscription book has recently appeared entitled "A Cyclopedia of American History," which is destined to have a large sale. It contains a complete history of both North and South America. The book contains six works condensed into one, viz:

I. Complete Biographies of the Early Discoverers. 48 in all. By Jeremy Belknap, D.D.

II. The Complete History of South America, Mexico and Central America. By William Robertson, D.D. This work of Robertson's is not only one of the most elegant and enchanting works in the language, but the only complete history of our sister continent ever published.

III. History of North America. By James Grahame.

IV. History of the United States. By David Ramsay.

V. History of the Early Indian Wars. A most unique and graphic work by Wm. Hubbard, A.M.

VI. The Entertaining History of King Phillip's War. By Thomas Church. "As originally printed in Boston in 1716, and reprinted in Newport, R. I., in 1774, by Solomon Southwick, in Queen street."

In short, it is a complete library of American History all in one work. The whole is comprised in one large volume, which sells for only $5.00, in good substantial binding.

A. McNeil and Friend McNeil have obtained the agency for this work, and will canvass the townships of Tecumseh and Macon at once. A. McNeil will take Tecumseh and Friend the town of Macon. They will undoubtedly get a good list of subscribers in each town.

THE Senatorial race in this state seems to be narrowed down to Bagley, Baldwin and Conger, with the chances slightly in favor of the former. Should a dead-lock take place between these three, then some dark horse will be trotted out at the last moment and win the prize.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

OPENING OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13, 1880.

The grand old Capitol building was thronged with people on the opening day of Congress. The House galleries were crowded, as they always are on any special occasion, long before the hour arrived, and many hundreds of visitors turned sorrowfully away, unable to gain admission. The diplomatic gallery and the little "private" gallery adjoining were the only break in the sea of faces. In the former sat only the Japanese Legation, and in the latter Mrs. Hayes and her small daughter. The reporters' gallery bloomed with handsome knights of the quill, wise as owls, and the small section of gallery left for anybody to occupy was black with as many of the colored brothers as could jam into it.

On the floor there was for half an hour before the Speaker's gavel fell an animated scene. Members gathered together in little knots, shaking hands, and chaffing each other pleasantly, others laughing aloud with the broad familiarity of school boys in term time. In the throng were quite a number of members elect of the next Congress, who came to get acquainted and take a few lessons of their predecessors. Above all noticeable features of the gathering the most prominent was the universal good nature prevailing among members of both parties. Four years ago when Congress assembled after the Presidential election there was a feeling of feverish excitement everywhere visible. Both sides were on the alert and the two houses, one Republican and the other Democratic, kept each an eagle eye upon the other. This time the contest for the control of the government being settled beyond dispute there was time and inclination on all sides for the amenities of personal as well as of political friendship.

To any one who has been in Washington a long time the scenes presented upon the opening of a session of Congress have little interest unless there is something unusual to be anticipated. In the absence of any extraordinary circumstances there is an element of sameness about the occasion. This is especially true of the Senate—the quiet, dignified, unruffled Senate. In that body last Monday there was the same formal hand-shaking among Senators not particularly interested in each other, the warm and hearty clasp of those who are really friends, the exchange of congratulations over victory, or expressions of sorrow over defeat, which is witnessed every year in the chamber on the first Monday of December. Probably there was a little more variety in the congratulations and condolence from the fact of this being the presidential year, and Senators on one side quite naturally felt more comfortable over the result than Senators on the other.—The four Senators who looked the most subdued of all were Messrs. Thurman, of Ohio, Kernan, of New York, Wallace, of Pennsylvania, and Randolph, of New Jersey, who will be succeeded in March by Republicans, and who probably felt that the places which know them now will soon know them no more forever. Mr. Eaton of Connecticut, the other Democrat to be succeeded by a Republican, was not in his seat. There was a good many inquiries for Senators Conkling and Don Cameron, but neither was present.

It is a prevalent custom for friends and admirers of Congressmen or Senators to send bouquets and baskets of flowers to their desks on opening day. These floral tributes were numerous in both houses on this occasion, even the handsome and notorious Achlen having his share. Strange that such a character, a regular rake, the Louisiana goat as he has been named, should always be a ladies' favorite. But so it is. The maddest man in Congress, however, was Senator Voorhees. As the galleries were filling up a messenger placed upon the desk of the "Tall Sycamore" a monster pyramid six feet high, and was at once surrounded by an admiring crowd. The design of this gorgeous affair was a sword a pair of scales, and an anchor covered with immortelles. Here was hope, justice and war forever—hope that by the sword justice would come. It was not learned whether it was from O'Donnovan Rossa, John Swinton, Joaquin Miller or Josh Hart. The chief feature—and in fact it absorbed all the others—was that most of the immortelles were red. The Senator came in about twelve, and throwing up his hands in holy horror ordered the thing to be instantly taken away.

No paragraph in the President's message has been so much commented on here as that in reference to giving Grant a life position at the head of the army. This was the President's own idea and was not suggested to him from any quarter, nor was it made a subject of consultation, except among two or three friends. Grant's intimate friends knew nothing of it, and were as surprised as anybody when they saw the suggestion in the message.

DOM PEDRO.

DEATH OF GEN. J. W. BROWN.

The venerable Gen. Joseph W. Brown, who has been lying seriously ill for several weeks at Sisk's Hotel, passed over the threshold into the great "beyond" on the morning of the 9th inst. He has long been regarded as the foremost man living among the hardy band of pioneers who established the first white settlement of Lenawee County in the summer of 1824.

Joseph W. Brown lived in Jefferson county, as a farmer, until the spring of 1824, when he sold his farm of three hundred acres, and emigrated to Michigan and arrived in Tecumseh in May, 1824, with his wife and five children, and in company with Austin E. Wing and Musgrove Evans, purchased the land and founded the village of Tecumseh, which place has been his home ever since. January 28th 1816, he married Miss Cornelia Tryon, daughter of John Tryon, of New Lebanon, Columbia county, New York, the most prominent merchant and business man of that county. By this marriage they had eleven children, seven sons and four daughters, only three of whom are alive. Their names were: Egbert B., (a Brigadier General in the Union army in the late Rebellion, who now lives in Hastings, Illinois); John T.; Maria; Cornelia E., (now living in Chicago, widow of Samuel Lester); Josephine; Jacob; William A.; Patterson; Mason K.; Lewis Cass; Ione, now living in Toledo, the widow of Henry Waite, son of Chief Justice Waite. Mrs. Brown died March 6th, 1857. The following explains his immigration to this place: Austin E. Wing was at one time secretary for Governor Cass, but in 1823, while a resident of Monroe, conceived the idea of becoming a Territorial delegate in Congress. Musgrove Evans, who was a relative of both Wing and Brown by marriage, came to Monroe in 1823 to visit Wing and look after a government surveying contract. Wing and Evans looked at the land where Tecumseh now stands, and at once made up their minds that if they could get a miller and a farmer, to unite with them in the enterprise both of their objects might be accomplished. "For," said Wing, "if we go into farming and establish a mill and the settlers know that I am interested, they will vote to send me to Congress, and if I am elected, why, with the aid of General Jacob Brown" (then in Washington at the head of the army) "you can be appointed government surveyor." "Then," says Evans, "let's go back to Jefferson county and interest Joseph W. Brown in the matter, for he is both miller and farmer." This plan was at once decided upon, and Evans returned to New York, bearing a letter from Wing, to J. W. Brown. Mr. Brown decided to accept the proposition, and a co-partnership, afterwards known as Wing, Evans & Brown, was formed, and the land was entered and the village founded as above described. In the spring of 1825 an election took place, the candidates for delegates to Congress being Wing of Monroe, and Bidwell and Richards of Detroit. Lenawee county cast thirteen votes at Tecumseh, all of which were for "A.E." Wing, which elected him, but Bidwell contested it on the ground that "A. E." Wing was not a legal ballot, and claimed his election. Wing then sent an agent to every voter in Lenawee county, and each on his oath, testified that he voted for Austin E. Wing of Monroe. This finally settled the dispute and Wing was admitted to Congress. Evans was subsequently made a government surveyor, and J. W. Brown was miller and farmer at Tecumseh. He built the first grist and saw mill in the county, and established the first stage mail-route between Detroit and Chicago, running the coaches through the woods before the roads were laid out; he did the first farming and ground the first wheat; he carried the first mail into the county from Monroe; and built the first frame house in the village. In the spring of 1825 he ploughed the first furrow in Lenawee county, and Ezra Blood, now of Tecumseh, held the plow.

In his business and social relations, the deceased took a prominent and active position. He was a public spirited citizen, and the business prominence of Tecumseh in an early day was due, in a large measure, to his enterprise and management.

He was an original corporator of St. Peters' Episcopal church in this village, and donated the lot upon which that church was built. He was elected a vestryman of the parish as organized, and also frequently at the annual elections by the congregation afterwards. He was a delegate to the convention called to organize the Protestant Episcopal church in the diocese of Michigan, and often represented the parish thereafter in the annual conventions of this diocese. His last appearance in that body was when the present bishop was elected. He received the communion during the last few days of his illness at the hands of his rector in company with his daughter and grand-daughter, Mrs. Henry Waite and Miss Lizzie Brown of Toledo.

The funeral services were held on Friday afternoon last at St. Peter's church, conducted by the Rector Rev. J. Phelps, and the remains were laid away in the old family lot in our beautiful evergreen cemetery. His ashes repose in his old home, which witnessed the busy events of his early life and business triumphs. May the sod rest lightly upon his coffin and may all the citizens of Tecumseh revere the memory of her foremost and earliest pioneer.

THE LATE PERLEY BILLS.

Appropriate Action Taken by the Circuit Court upon His Decease.

Last week Tuesday afternoon the resolutions heretofore passed by the Lenawee County bar upon the death of our late townsman, were formerly offered in court by Judge Stacy, who was chairman of the committee that drafted them.

He accompanied the presentation with a few appropriate remarks upon the character of the deceased, and was followed by A. L. Millard, B. L. Baxter and C. R. Miller.

His Honor, Judge Pratt then spoke as follows:

Of Mr. Bills' career as a lawyer I only know by reputation. I always heard him spoken of as an able, successful lawyer, very honorable and conscientious in his dealings.

I was a member with him of the constitutional convention of 1867. I found him kind, dignified and courteous in his manner, but very firm and decided in his convictions. As a speaker, he was distinguished for his candor, modesty and fairness. In debate he was precise, forcible, logical, and very acute and discriminating. He was quick to detect the fallacy of his opponent's argument, and very clear, concise and pointed in his replies. His position as chairman of the committee on intoxicating liquors, and the champion of prohibition, compelled him to take a very active part in the debates. He was opposed by some of the ablest men in the convention—by Lothrop, McClellan, Conger, and many others who advocated license or taxation. The debate upon this subject occupied more time than upon any other question before the convention. Mr. Bills was equal to the occasion. He showed great scope and research, and maintained and vindicated the cause of prohibition in a masterly manner. He showed his nature was kind and sympathetic, and that he had a warm heart for suffering humanity. I quote a passage from one of his speaches, in reply to the argument that licences would confine the sale to decent and respectable men:

"If anybody is to be licensed to sell liquor, I would pick out the most debauched drunkard I could find; I would put him behind the counter; I would give him the license and protection of the law, for he would be a beacon-light to many a young man, not to touch or handle, or taste the accursed cup."

In the discussion upon the question of salaries, he showed great intelligence and a just appreciation of the labors performed by circuit judges. He said, among other things: "I submit to members of this convention whether, in fact, the position of circuit judge is not a position of more responsibility than that of a judge of a supreme court, requiring the performance of duties quite as grave and quite as responsible as the duties devolved upon the judges of the supreme court? It is of course true that the judges of the supreme court are the judges of the court of final resort, and upon their judgments rendered the law becomes established. Nevertheless my own conviction is that, in the daily discharge of their duties upon the bench, the labor and responsibility which bear heavily upon the circuit judges are greater than those that bear upon the judges of the supreme court. My own impression is that the salary of the circuit judges should be three thousand dollars a year."

Our deceased brother exhibited in his life a noble type of true Christian manhood. I will close this tribute to his memory by quoting, from one of his speeches, his acknowledgement of his dependence upon the Divine Being:

"I am pleased to have the opportunity, in adopting this constitution, to give my support to a preamble recognizing the Divine Being; and I would say to members of this convention, that I desire to do more than simply to acknowledge his existence, I desire in the constitution, as everywhere else to acknowledge my dependence upon Him. For this reason, and for this reason mainly, I preferred the form of preamble presented by the gentleman from Van Buren to that presented by the committee."

The declaration which the gentleman from Van Buren proposed as the preamble was in these words:

"We, the people of the state of Michigan, grateful to Almighty God, the sovereign ruler of Nations, for civil and religious liberty, and acknowledging our dependence upon Him for the continuance thereof, to us and our posterity, do ordain and establish the following constitution." (Vol. 2, Convention debates, page 933)

It is pleasant to contemplate such lines. They teach us valuable lessons which we may profit by. Their influence lives after them, and is a blessing to society.

The resolutions will be spread upon the journal of the court, and out of respect to the memory of diseased the court will now adjourn until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The remarks of Judge Pratt were also ordered spread on the records.

CHARLES BIDWELL, sheriff elect, seems to be doing considerable driving; we presume he is trying to answer in person a number of those many daily letters. We clip the following notices from the Monroe Observer and Adrian Press respectively:

Sheriff-elect Bidwell, of Tecumseh, is getting letters by the bushel from the would be deputy sheriffs in various localities of the county. So far as Morenci is concerned, we have heard of but one name mentioned in that connection, and that is of our townsman William Jibb, who surely deserves a re-appointment.

It is said that Sheriff-elect Bidwell receives an even peck of letters every day, from Republicans who want to be appointed deputies, and from wise heads who think they can tell him something about how the thing ought to run. It is fortunate for Mr. Bidwell that advice don't cost much.

Horsemen, ask your merchant for Henry & Johnson's Arnica and Oil Liniment, and keep it always in the stable, to use in case of accident.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

ONLY eight more days before Christmas.

MARLEY, the Toledo clothier has a new adv. this week.

FANNIE PINDELL, of Toledo, spent Sunday at her home here.

THE Methodist church is now lighted with elegant new chandeliers.

DONAVIN'S original Tennesseeans at the Opera House next Thursday evening.

SAMUEL McMULLEN has lately returned from Canada and is now living in Lake Ridge.

GEORGE BRUCE is probably one of the happiest of men and the just cause is a little ten pound girl.

LAST Friday being Milton's birthday, the schools commemorated it with appropriate exercises.

THE Troubadours received a crowded house at Adrian last Monday night; about thirty Tecumseh people attended.

MANY of our supplement cards are changed this week, and our readers should peruse the supplement carefully.

MISS EVA PORTER, of Grand Rapids, who has been visiting here for a few weeks past, left for her home last Saturday.

TECUMSEH has five churches and a Friends' meeting house—six places of public worship in all—and still the boys go skating on Sundays.

ED. ARMSTRONG, who has until recently been in the employ of Slayton & Son, is now a fireman upon the main line of the Lake Shore road.

W. W. COOK, of Leslie, was in town the last of the week; His genial countenance adorned our sanctum on Monpay morning before his return home.

W. C. JORDAN and C. H. Smith have received their $100 reward for the capture and conviction of Simmons.—A nice little plum to receive just before the holidays.

THE State Teachers' Association will meet at Lansing on Tuesday Evening, Dec. 28th, and continue through the 30th. Railroads and hotels offer reduced rates.

WM. E. CHEEVER, of Detroit, paid Tecumseh a visit last week. He is canvassing for Bryant's History of the United States, and took a large number of subscribers here.

ALL of the neighboring places have excellent lecture courses for this winter; and why should Tecumseh do without one when there are so many good lecturers in the field.

FOR the week ending December 7th there were 4761 pieces of mail matter transmitted through the Tecumseh post office, 2113 being letters; 769 postal cards. This does not include the matter mailed at the depot.

THE State Grange is in session at Lansing this week. This vicinity will be represented by Mr. & Mrs. J. L. Remington, of Macon, Mr. & Mrs. Wm. R. Wilson, of Ridgeway, and Mr. & Mrs. Wm. H. Mather, of Tecumseh.

CYRUS WELLS writes us from Minneapolis, Minnesota, saying that he is permanently located there and is well pleased with the place. He also calls for the HERALD, which we gladly send him, wishing him success in his new home.

POSTMASTERS are now required to keep a minute of the number of letters that are sent out in every mail, and also the number of the various description of letters; as there are fifty-seven different kinds of letters it makes considerable extra work.

WE have just received the largest and finest stock of fancy cards ever brought into this market. Also a new font of Chinese border, expressly for New Year's cards. Our friends are requested to leave their orders early for New Years' cards and avoid the rush at the last moment.

DURING the past year we have been receiving, weekly, the Farmers' Review, published at Chicago, by the Farmers' Review Company, and can vouch for its excellence as a farm and family paper. Indeed we know of no paper of its class so well worth its price as is the Farmers' Review. Every farmer in this community should have it. It costs but a dollar per year. You can have the Review and our own paper, each weekly, for one year, for $2.50, the Review being sent the balance of this year free.

GEORGE H. COLE, one of the denizens of Macon, has never been a very amiable factor of the family circle of his household. He has from time to time indulged in beating the children and his wife in a disgraceful manner. Last week he was extremely cruel in his assaults upon her, and so she took refuge in the law; and papers were issued last Saturday for his arrest and placed in Officer Merritt's hands. He obtained the culprit and lodged him in the lock-up from whence he took him to the county jail. The examination was set down for this afternoon.

CARL BERGER last Tuesday morning became the proud father of a nine pound boy

WE have received an interesting letter from P. W. Adams which will appear next week.

TOM HUNTER has recovered from his recent sickness and is again out upon the streets.

S. H. MERRITT is up north on a business trip buying lumber for the new planing mill.

THE Heck Brothers are in need of an interpreter to translate their foreign correspondence.

MISS GRACE PARKHURST who has been visiting in the West returned to her home last Thursday.

N. M. SUTTON has invested in a portable saw mill and is now engaged in testing the same upon his farm.

THE poultry men of Tecumseh are thriving as usual; this week they were exceedingly cramped for cars, but managed to ship 71,191 lbs.

JOHNNY HUGHES and Newberry Satterthwaite are at Adrian attending the Bangs vs. the Lake Shore railway suit, which is in progress now.

F. A. DEWEY has shown us a facsimile copy of the New England Weekly Journal, of date of March 20th, 1727. It is a decided literary curiosity.

THE night cap social which was appointed at Geo. Hanford's, in Dist. No. 5, Raisin, and afterwards postponed, will come off to-morrow, Friday, evening.

IF you want to buy goods for Christmas don't forget that Slayton will sell all kinds at auction next Saturday in the Opera House, all day and in the evening.

MR. C. W. RAYNOR, of New York city, was the guest of Mr. Lucius Lilley last week. Mr. Raynor was one of the officers of the old Bank of Tecumseh in 1859.

WEBB W. FRAZER has taken a desk in Willis Merritt's law office, where he may be found in the future. He has the agency of several insurance companies and will unite the insurance with his law business. Success to him.

HECK BROS. sent out nine cars of flour last night for Europe and at the present time have thirty-one car loads stowed away ready for shipment as soon as they can obtain cars. It is at such times that men should be able to discern the necessity of another railroad.

DAVID VAN TYNE received a telegram last Thursday announcing the death of his brother, Abram VanTyne, of Chelsea. He was the father of Mary A. Van Tyne, a former teacher in our schools, and he was a physician of an extended practice, being in his eighty-third year at the time of his death.

S. F. MARSTELLER of the Clinton Marble Works has recently erected on the cemetery lot of Wm. Richard a family monument which for beauty of design and excellence of finish has no equal in our cemetery. The large die with panels in relief and richly carved cap of the corinthian order is surmounted by a beautiful statue life size and emblematic of hope. Marsteller's works have long been noted for turning out a superior class of work and this will certainly not detract from his well earned reputation. It is truly a masterpiece of art, and should be seen to be appreciated, as a description would utterly fail in conveying an impression of its grandeur.

ONE morning last week Prof. Fairfield, in order to satisfy his mind, after the chapel exercises asked how many could mention two things that he had said in his prayer. After scanning the whole room only two could be found that could do it. He then asked how many could tell of two things that he had mentioned in his previous prayers, and this time not more than two could tell. At this he told the pupils that his prayer had been the same for over fifty mornings, with a slight changing of the phraseology. The professor's mind must have been satisfied of one thing that the pupils did not do during the morning exercises.

A CLEVER ACT.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. George Cadwell discovered that the house was on fire; and that it was burning under the roof boards in a place impossible to reach without cutting through the roof. She immediately raised the cry of alarm and Mr. Sanford hearing her ran over and procured a ladder. But at this point, Mr. Sanford on account of his infirmities declined to go upon the roof. Mrs. Cadwell, not willing that the house should burn without anything being done to save it, and being of a sprightly nature, seized the ax herself and climbed upon the wing of the house. From there she reached the place in the roof over the fire and at once commenced cutting a hole in the roof. She soon had this done and then she began to pour in water upon the flames. At this juncture Mr. Cadwell arrived and in a short time the flames were extinguished. Mrs. Cadwell certainly exhibited a pluck and sagacity that recommends her to a place of honor among firemen.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

On Tuesday last Mr. A. L. Henry, of Lansing, and Miss Ella Tilden, of Tecumseh, started on the matrimonial pathway together. Quite a large gathering assembled at the residence of the bride's parents, consisting of family relatives and a very few intimate friends, to witness the ceremony. The party was an exceedingly happy one, and all went merry as a marriage bell. The array of wedding gifts was more than usually attractive and costly. A singular incident occurred at dinner. Mrs. Wm. W. Tilton was one of the guests. She was the first woman who was married in Lenawee county, and Ella Tilden was the last one, and they both sat at the same table together. Mr. Henry has a cage in readiness, having purchased a house and furnished it, and the bride and groom began housekeeping yesterday in their own home. We regret that Miss Tilden is going to leave Tecumseh, but she will find many friends in Lansing and a pleasant home there. Lon and Ella begin their new life under the brightest auspices. May prosperity attend them. We append a list of the

A GOOD LESSON.

Careless driving on the part of Geo. Buck, who lives a few miles west of here, was the cause of serious injuries to Mrs. George Adamson last Saturday afternoon. As she was walking up Railroad street at the corner of Robt. Owens, Buck was driving a horse and buggy down Shawnee street. Mrs. Adamson was partly across the street when she saw him coming and did not have the least idea that there was any danger in crossing before the horse. But Buck was driving fast, and although he must have known that Mrs. Adamson was in danger of being run over, he did not do as much as to try to stop his horse or to turn it out of the way. The consequence was that the horse struck Mrs. Adamson knocking her some twelve feet. Buck as soon as this happened slackened the speed of the horse and turned out of the way. Mrs. Adamson was severely bruised, and from the reports of those standing near, it seems a mere chance that she was not more seriously injured. Mr. Adamson had Buck immediately arrested, and he was taken before Justice Burridge by Officer Merritt, and had his examination fixed for to-day. But Buck last Tuesday thought it would be better for him to settle the matter the best he could, so he paid the costs and ten dollars.

AN "artful dodger" picked up a can of oysters from a case standing in front of Jim Cole's market last Saturday evening and started up the street with high anticipations of a good Sunday dinner. But Jim saw the fellow and immediately gave chase. The fellow seeing him coming, when in front of the Postoffice, threw the can into the ditch. But Jim collared him and the oysters and brought them back to the market, where Jim talked to the fellow and finally let him go.

THE COMING CONCERT.

EDITOR HERALD:

Sir—I am constrained to seek the public ear through your columns, on a matter of vital moment to the best interests of our town. Every village has a name and reputation as truly as an individual. Tecumseh has a well earned name for attention to those interests which conserve public morality. Our churches, schools, cemetery, our good dwellings, trim yards, well-kept streets, our freedom from evidence of abandoned projects in tumble-down rookeries, etc., etc., all these things still maintaining the good reputation of our beautiful village. But it begins to be said, on the streets and elsewhere, unpleasantly, often, that Tecumseh patronizes only third-class minstrel shows.—burnt cork and loud display; while chaste, profitable entertainments are deserted.

I notice that "The Original Tennesseeans," under the management of Mr. George B. Donavin, are to be with us on Thursday evening, 23d inst. This colored concert troupe has been long before the public—have talent and qualification for their vocation, and maintain from year to year an untarnished reputation. They are most fully endorsed both by individuals and societies. By such men as Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D., Rev. Arthur Edwards, D.D.; such societies as the Baptist State convention, The Island Park association, the Chautauqua managers; over a score of churches opened their doors to them in Chicago where they have been heard an hundred times; while her press, secular and religious, endorse them. There comes to us then, (I know not at whose invitation) a concert troupe kept before the public by that sentiment which has so recently thrust out of New York, without a hearing, the passion play; and for once I discern in this coming a fitting opportunity for parents to accompany their children to an entertainment of known worth, novelty, pathos, purity. Let us keep our boys—our sons and daughters—away from bad amusements, and go with them to good entertainments. I speak for Tecumseh, not for Mr. Donavin.

Respectfully, WM. GRANDY.

Tecumseh, Dec. 14, 1880.

THE BUTLER ROAD.

Last Monday afternoon a HERALD reporter visited the place where the track layers were at work on the Butler railroad. They were at that time in Raisin about three miles south west of Ridgeway. There are about sixty-five men at work. They have a boarding car where they sleep and eat, the supplies being brought out every other day from Detroit. The work train is loaded in the morning with rails, a sufficient number for the day's work. The men are divided into gangs of rail carriers, spikers, etc., so that everything moves along quickly.—They lay on the average 70,000 feet of track per day, and at that rate they will be in Adrian some time next week. They have a patent apparatus attached to the sides of the flat cars, consisting of revolving grooved wheels by which the rails can be quickly carried from one end of the train to the other. This is the English method and has never before been used in this country. The track is not ballasted as they proceed, but is done afterwards. It is quite interesting to see the progressing work and many persons visit the scene every day.

The Cork Tree.

ITS GROWTH, PRODUCTS AND UTILITY.

The tree from which is obtained the cork of commerce is a species of evergreen oak, growing in several of the departments of France, Spain, Portugal, Sicily, Italy and Algeria. It is principally cultivated, however, in Spain and Portugal. This species of oak loses its foliage only in the month of May, and when the new growth of leaves is sufficiently strong to replace the old ones of the preceding year. It flowers in May, and its fruit is fit for gathering only in the month of November of the next season; that is, eighteen months after flowering. Its acorns are less astringent than those of other species of oaks, and are used for fattening swine, sheep and poultry. They are also employed to a considerable extent in the manufacture of certain kinds of fecula.

The cork oak flourishes best in arid, sandy soils, and under favorable conditions reaches the height of 40 to 50 feet, with a circumference of 10 to 13 feet. The trunk, from its base up to where the first branches begin, is 9 to 13 feet long; and it is this portion of the tree from which is peeled the bark that constitutes the cork of commerce. This substance, "cork," consists of the outer layer of the bark, which by annual additions from within, gradually becomes a thick, spongy mass, the rapidity of growth determining the quality of the bark. A quick growth is represented by a fine grain and light weight; a slow growth producing a contrary effect. The bark, if allowed to remain on the tree, becomes so fissured and cracked as to be unfit for use. There are two varieties of the cork bark known in commerce, the white and the black; the former of these is the product of trees growing in France, and the latter of those cultivated in Spain. The white is superior to the other on account of its greater beauty, its smoothness, and greater freedom from cracks and inequalities. It is of a yellowish-gray color on both surfaces, and cuts (on account of its much finer grain) more smoothly than the black. The operation of stripping the bark takes place when the trees have attained the age of 15 to 20 years. In the month of August, when the sap is in movement, the workmen begin by making a transverse incision in the bark, just beneath the branches, and another at the base of the tree; then two longitudinal incisions are made, and the bark beaten on every side with the back of an ax, in order to loosen it from the subjacent fiber; then by means of their ax handles, or of levers prepared for the purpose, they pry off the loosened bark, which falls to the ground in cylindrical pieces. During this process the greatest care must be taken not to injure the newly formed layer of suber or cork lying beneath. After collection, the rough exterior of the bark is either rasped off or slightly charred, then piled in stacks and allowed to dry, during which process it loses one-fifth of its weight. In the charring process, the pores become closed up, and the cork is rendered denser, or receives what is technically called "nerve." In this state, after being flattened, it is cut into lengths of about four feet, and put up in bales for export.

The stripping takes place about every ten years, the product improving with each successive removal. The operation seems to be beneficial to the tree, for if the bark be allowed to remain on it naturally, the cork oak rarely lives longer than 50 or 60 years; if, on the contrary, it be removed periodically, the tree continues to flourish from 100 to 150 years. The first product is of a rough, woody nature, and useful only in rustic work or as a tanning material. The second stripping is also of a coarse nature, and useful only for floats for nets, water conduits, and such purposes.

The economic uses to which cork is applied are much too numerous to pass in review; it will be sufficient to speak of one only, that of the manufacture of stoppers. For the purpose of stopping bottles cork was not generally used till nearly the end of the seventeenth century. Many substitutes have been proposed, but except in the case of aerated liquids none of these have been generally employed. In the manufacture of bottle corks, the bark is cut up into slips, which by means of a guage are made narrow or wide, according to the size of the cork or bungs wanted. The slips are then cut into squares or "quarters," which are trimmed into the required shape by means of a very long, thin knife, kept very sharp. In this operation the knife is kept immovable while the cork is drawn over the edge by the workmen. The corks are then thrown into baskets, and sorted out according to size by women and children. Cork-cutting in Catalonia and the South of France furnishes a livelihood for a considerable portion of the population of these districts. Several attempts have been made to cut corks by machinery, but they have not been successful in suspending hand labor, which is comparatively cheap abroad. The machine principally used for this purpose was exhibited in operation at the Paris Exhibition; it was worked by a woman, and near her was seated a man patiently carving out his corks (with the usual knife), quite as neatly and nearly as rapidly as the machine. The cork-cutting machine is an instrument similar to a carpenter's plane working in a groove, the knife being horizontal. The cork is placed between two chucks, and by pushing the plane along the groove the cork is caused to rotate in front of the knife as it passes along.

No economic use is made of the cork oak except that of fuel, although it might be useful as a timber, since it is very heavy, and as hard as boxwood.

Hawaiian Flower Girls.

The Hawaiians are passionately fond of flowers. Bevies of happy, rollicing native girls climb the sides of the mountains or explore the picturesque gorges in search of the choicest specimens, and, having gathered enough to supply the market for the day, they dash down to Honolulu, riding horse-back man fashion, at a terrible gait. They are sure to bedeck themselves first with "leis" or wreaths of flowers which encircle their foreheads and hang suspended from their necks like so many necklaces glittering in the sunlight. Suspended from the neck, also, and flowing down their backs, are great streamers of "maile" wreaths, plucked from a deliciously fragrant and perpetually green exotic without the aid of which no Hawaiian belle is robed in the height of fashion. Arriving in town the flower girls select some shady nook along the public streets, sitting by the half-dozen or more, dexterously assorting the flowers, and making "leis" with great rapidity, and spreading them out fantastically, so as to attract attention and invite the public to patronize them by its most Platonic form, and their love chants are usually successful in drawing custom. At the time that the famous Count Rochefort went through the Hawaiian capital, he was, while walking along, literally covered with wreaths by a charming native beauty.

Impure blood, and all diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Urinary Organs are speedily cured. For nervousness and attendant ailments, they are a never failing remedy, and positively cure where all others fail. Try the Electric Bitters and be convinced of their wonderful merits. For sale by C. Mr. F. B. Thurber of New York, furnishes to the December Scribner a paper which will be widely read, and which bids fair to create considerable excitement. It is entitled "The Railroads and the People," and it presents most forcibly the recent exposures of corruption in the great railroad monopolies of this country. The December number of Scribner contains also many striking illustrative as well as literary features. The November issue was the largest number ever printed; it contained one hundred and seventy pages, and was crowded with brilliant pictures and articles of more than usual interest.

To prevent a hen from setting, tie a wisp of straw about half the size of a wine bottle upon her back. When she feels the incumbrance, she gets off the nest and runs wildly about, striving in every way to free herself from it. After two or three days' useless struggle, she resigns herself to her fate, and apparently makes up her mind to the inevitable. The wisp of straw may then be removed, and it will be found that her exertions have so changed the current of her thoughts that she henceforth gives up all idea of setting, and seeks consolation for her wounded feelings in diligently laying eggs.

THE New York Observer is an interesting and valuable family paper. We can recommend it to our readers, who wish to take a New York paper, as pure and safe. A Grand Reputation.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has reached a reputation that is not limited by the confines of section or country. There are no injurious substances, nor false and temporary stimulants in the preparation. It is purely vegetable and compounded under a formula that has passed severe tests, and won endorsements from some of the highest medical talent in the country.—New York World.

The experiment has been made of sowing oats and wheat together, with a view to obtain a winter covering for the wheat. The seed, in the proportion of one part of oats to two parts of wheat, was sown in the fall, and the oats sprung up quickly, and were killed by the early frost, the stalks and leaves lying on the ground all winter, keeping the snow from blowing away, and preventing the sun from thawing the frozen ground. In the spring the dead oats made a good top dressing for the growing wheat. The crop of wheat in the following season was reported to be excellent, while wheat on the adjoining land planted in the usual manner was of no value.

A Liberal Offer.

We have made arrangements to furnish The Ohio Farmer, one of the oldest, largest and most valuable weekly agricultural and family journals of America, with the HERALD, both one year, postage paid for only $2.80.

A novelty in decoration is to lay down pieces of plate glass flat on the floor, and to border these mirrors with flowers; the effect is that of a silver lake, which reflects the flowers and the palm trees that stand here and there in huge boxes in the halls and corridors. Upon the branches of these trees, or hanging from them, mounted on invisible wire, there are various small birds with brilliant plumage, and beetles of green and gold; baskets are suspended from the ceiling, and the effect of the whole is lovely, like a dream of fairyland.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

SEEDING DOWN PASTURES.

"E.V.M.'s" description of Smith's "permanent pasture" stirs me up to write a little on the subject of permanent pastures. In our best grain growing countries of southwestern Ohio permanent pastures are almost unknown, and yet there are thousands of acres in the best countries that would yield a greater profit in grass, and which have, in fact, been nearly ruined by too constant plowing. Take, for example, our county of Butler, and along the bluffs of the Miami and its numerous tributaries there is much land that to continue to cultivate is to ruin. There are to-day many fields in my county that are washed into gullies so as to be almost worthless, and there are others on the steepest hillsides that are yielding as large a profit per acre as the rich bottoms, although they have not been plowed for fifty years. If I could persuade every farmer having broken lands to seed them down for permanent pastures and to start on them, in addition, groves of timber, it would add millions of dollars to the value of the farms of a single State. I believe that it would be a good investment to spend ten dollars per acre, if it was necessary to do so, to get these hillsides well set in grasses that would be permanent, and when once set they should never, no not even "hardly ever," be plowed up again.

How are we most likely to succeed with these lands? is the question many are asking, and the one I have been trying to settle since four years ago I came into possession of such land. Timothy and clover, the grasses that are usually sown by the farmers here, will not do to depend on, for they are too short-lived. Blue grass alone is slow to spread and get a hold on the soil, and so I have adopted the rule of sowing mixed grasses, the more kinds the better, for this purpose. I sowed several acres of steep side-hill last spring, seeding heavily with timothy and clover and using a bushel of blue grass seed per acre, in addition. I have an excellent stand of grass, and hope that by the time the first two grasses are gone, the latter will have full possession. I tried another experiment in which I feel a good deal of interest. Knowing how blue grass will spread where it once gets root, instead of sowing seed, I scatter bits of sod, about two inches square, over one-fourth of an acre. We chopped the sod up with a sharp spade, and taking it in baskets dropped a piece every step and trod it into the soil with the foot. This was after sowing oats, and I found when we cut the oats, that they were all growing finely. I shall watch these with great interest another year to see how much they spread. It would not be expensive to seed land in this way, as a few barrels of sods would cover an acre.

I find rye of great value to the farmer in getting a stand of grass in runs and washes. If you can get two or three weeks between heavy rains, the rye will come up and strike root so as to hold the soil and protect the young grass. Go to the side-hill pastures where one of the gullies has started; perhaps it is now two feet deep and three or four wide. Plow a furrow each side, so as to loosen the soil, and partly fill the bottom, round off the edges, put in a dam of brush, cornstalks, or straw, every few rods, and seed it with rye and a heavy seeding of grass. If there is not a heavy rain to wash it out within two or three weeks the rye will be rooted so as to hold. If the land is poor, pulverize some manure as fine as possible—if you screen it all the better—and sow it along the run. The rye will hold it there for the benefit of the young grass. September is the best month for this, but the rye may also be used in spring and will furnish a fine protection to the young grass and will not head out or even joint.

I believe that a moderate amount of care and expense would render lands that are now scarcely worth the taxes, the best sheep lands in the West. We have no grass so early, or that bears tramping so well, as the blue grass. It also seems to thrive in the most dense shade as well as, or better than in the sun.

A locust or soft maple grove will grow out of reach of sheep in three years, and of cattle in five, and by fencing off a few acres at a time, these hillsides could be soon covered with timber to supply the demands of the future. I have said nothing about weeds in the pasture, for I doubt if many farmers who read are so slovenly as to allow them. With a little assistance the sheep will kill out the briers and elders, and a persistent cutting will destroy such as the sheep leave. This matter of permanent pastures is one of great importance, and that should be taken hold of at once, as the longer it is neglected, the worse the hillsides become. I have not experimented with it on grass, but am of the opinion that bone meal will be found the cheapest and best fertilizer for these lands. There are many old pastures run out and bare, that might be quadrupled in value by re-seeding and harrowing, if a dressing of manure or ground bone was given, and if once well seeded, so as to form a good sod they will improve for years to come, instead of getting less productive, as is now the case. This work should be done as early in spring as the land can be harrowed, and the farmer should have his grass seed and fertilizers all ready so that there will be no delay when the time comes to do it.

THE PROFITS FROM A STONY FARM.

Some years ago a friend of ours took a farm that, in the language of his neighbors, was but a stone-heap. He had much sympathy. He would have to work an extra horse; his gears would soon wear out; his implements would be torn to pieces. Others before him had tried this farm and were ruined.

The place was by no means a solid rock. Down several feet below the surface it was thick and heavy enough; but the upper portion was rather shaly, and broke up into pieces from a few ounces to perhaps a pound or two. Crops seemed to grow pretty well in the ground, if once the plow could be brought to go deep enough; but as it has been worked, it seldom had more than a couple of inches of loosening before the crops were put in, to dry of course when the long summer droughts set in. The roads round about the farm and up to the farm buildings were like most roads of the kind. Through soft clay they were nothing but seas of mud at those times of the year when of all others we need a good bottom to drive on. Every spring there was the usual cursing of horses, breaking of carts and gears, and all other miseries of hauling through mud, which so many have experienced on farms that we need not more particularly describe. This farm was no exception to this, and all the neighboring farms were of similar character. Our friend of the stone-heap took in the situation. In the fall, after corn-cutting time was over his two hired men at odd times were set with garden-rakes to rake stones. It seems like a big task to get over a score of acres in this way. The loose surface stones were raked together in windrows, and then shoveled into a cart, and from time to time spread in the "lane." In his own language it did not cost half as much to rake this stone, already broken by nature, than it would have done to quarry rock and break it. His roads are among the best about. They cost him little; and his land gradually cleared of the stone can be plowed deeply and easily, quite as much so as those who so much pitied him; while in the comfortable travel in bad weather, he now feels a pity for those farmers whose lands are not the stone-heaps his was.

There is a valuable lesson in a little fact of this kind. There is rarely any thing on one's farm that may not be turned to good account; while even land which is cursed by some who do not know better, may be turned to an Eden when one knows how to do it. —Germantown Telegraph.

Diabetes Cured—Another Life Saved.

It is claimed that Kidney-Wort will cure all diseases, and Diabetes is generally regarded as incurable; but it appears from the following that there is hope for such sufferers:

New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 8, 1872.

Gentlemen—Grateful for the benefit I have derived from Kidney-Wort, recommended to me last winter by a lady friend, I wish to say a word for the encouragement of those who may be suffering as I have been.

I was troubled for about two years with a kidney complaint which assumed the form of diabetes, and although I consulted the best medical advice and tried several largely advertised remedies I found nothing to give me relief until I made use of your Kidney-Wort. I took two boxes before perceiving much benefit, and have taken in all eight boxes. In short, I can say that I am confident if I had not taken it I should not now be alive. I have recommended it to others, and they have taken it with like results.

Respectfully yours, BENJ. RYDER, Conductor New Bedford & Taunton Railroad.

THE HERALD FOR 1881.

Thirty years ago on the 25th day of May last the initial number of the TECUMSEH HERALD greeted its patrons. Through all the succeeding years, it has sent its weekly message among the homes of Northern Lenawee, and exerted its humble influence for the business upbuilding of this portion of the Master's vineyard. Like all human undertakings it has had its ups and downs in life; it has been buffeted by the storms of adversity, and has basked in the sunshine of prosperity. But the days of uncertainty in the HERALD's history have passed. It has become one of the fixed institutions of this community. It has come to stay.

Improvement and progress are the watchwords of the present age. The whole country is feeling the hilarious effects of a grand business boom, and the newspaper fraternity, being among the first to feel the quickening impulse, are extending their lines, advancing their outposts, making new conquests and gaining new victories. In making the local history of this section of Michigan during the coming twelve months, the HERALD will occupy its accustomed position in the front rank. It has already achieved the distinction of being the best local newspaper in Lenawee county, and it will be a better local family paper during the year 1881 than it has ever been hitherto.

ITS CHARACTER.

A word in regard to its general character.

The HERALD has never been and never claimed to be a neutral paper.—It has always been—since the present owner conducted it—an independent paper, and such it will continue to be. The HERALD will be the organ of no party, sect or clique; but it must not be supposed that it will have no opinions of its own. We shall freely express our views on all topics, whether of a political, religious, social, temperance or general character.

While we shall endeavor to eschew all mere partisan debate in politics, we shall devote more attention and space than heretofore to the discussion of free trade and the tariff, of civil service reform, of revenue reform, of currency and trade, and all those economical and financial questions which are pressing themselves upon the people for solution. Party lines are fading away. People are looking more to principles and less to names. The voters of all parties are ready to discard "machine" politics, and to enlighten themselves upon those great questions of governmental policy on which parties must divide in the near future.

As a local family newspaper the HERALD will continue to be the leading organ in the towns of Northern Lenawee. It will be a faithful mirror of the social and business life of this vicinity.

ITS SPECIAL FEATURES.

1. A full assortment of local news from its regular township and neighborhood correspondents.
2. A good story and other reading matter for the "Family Circle."
3. A department of "County News" gleaned from the county press.
4. A carefully edited department of "State News."
5. An original "Washington Letter" during each session of Congress.
6. A "Farmers' Page," which will be devoted to general agricultural news and the reports of all farmers' clubs within our jurisdiction.
7. A column of extracts each week from the leading independent and party newspapers.
8. A live local department, devoted specially to Tecumseh news, supplemented with an illustrated corner each week.

This is one of the best family receipt books ever published, and is worth at retail fifty cents. Subscribers sending in their names at once will be credited to Jan. 1, 1882. They will get the remaining numbers for December free. Old subscribers will receive the "Home Guide" on the same terms as new ones, upon the payment of all arrears up to the present time.

The HERALD for one year, and Page's Map of Michigan, will be furnished for $2,00. The retail price of the map alone is $2,00.

This Map of Michigan is published by H. R. Page & Co., of Chicago, and is the best state Map in the market. It is 31 by 40 inches in size, mounted on rollers, contains a complete postoffice index, and every railroad in the state.

KENNEDY & CO., will remove to H. Lee's new block about January 1st.

A pleasant announcement made by the Editors of St. Nicholas is that they have secured for their next number a story of Indian life by Inahtatheamba (Bright-eyes), the daughter of an Omaha chief, who has been traveling through the States during the last two years under the protection of two of her kinsmen, trying to rouse the conscience of the whites to the rights of her race. Miss La Flesche (for that is her English name) makes now, we believe, her first essay as an author, but she cannot but succeed if she gives as dramatic pictures of the daily domestic life of her people as she has hitherto done in her addresses. She has broad culture and keen perceptive faculty, and she has given herself up to the cause of her people with a simplicity and passionate singleness of heart that must rouse sympathy in every man and women whose own instincts are true and pure.—N. Y. Tribune.

—E. R. Hascall having been separated by death from all his family, and now sold his farm, consequently it now becomes necessary to break up house keeping and sell out nearly everything that belongs to this department of life, such as a full set of first-class furniture, carpets, sofa chairs, bureaus, whole sets of bedroom furniture, bed, bedding, springs, mattrasses, and all first-class, having been purchased but recently. Any one needing anything in this line of goods will do well to call at his residence before buying elsewhere. He also has some farm implements, two first-class cows, a lot of good pigs, and three first-class breeding sows for sale; also, a good family library of books and a good sewing machine, and many other articles too numerous to mention. All in need please call at his residence. On account of feeble health he is at home most of the time. This is a good opportunity for those in need as all will be sold cheap.

THE Leading American Newspaper.

The New York Tribune for 1881.

The Largest Circulation Among the Best People.

During the past year THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE reached the largest circulation it ever attained, with the single exception of a short period in the first Lincoln campaign. It is a larger circulation and more widely distributed over the whole country than any ever enjoyed by any other newspaper in the United States. This fact may be taken as the verdict of the American People on The Tribune's political course in fidelity to sound principles, and its merits as a newspaper.

For 1881 The Tribune will try to deserve equally well of the public. What and how much it did for the success of General Garfield it is unnecessary to let earnest Republicans tell. It now hopes to give to his administration a discriminating support as effective as its efforts for his election.

Every citizen who helped to bring in this administration should watch its course. The press to be recorded in The Tribune for 1881 will therefore have a peculiar interest. The case presents besides to show whether the South will still sacrifice everything to solidity; and whether the Democratic party, after twenty years of disloyalty and defeat, will dissolve or reform. Abroad it will show whether England can compose Ireland; whether the Republic in France, without the support of the leaders who established it, can stand alone; whether the Turk can longer pollute Europe. In Science it promises such practical triumphs as the use of electricity for gas, new modes of heating, and new forms of power in place of steam. In Literature and Art it offers the very flower of our nineteenth century development; in Religion, a concentration of force, and union of organizations on similar creeds and better work.

The well-known special features of The Tribune will be sedulously maintained. Its Agricultural Department will remain the fullest and best. The Household and the Young Folks' Departments, the literary, scientific and religious features, the standard market reports, will all be kept up, and as opportunity offers, extended.

THE TRIBUNE PREMIUMS.

The Tribune has never been equalled in the substantial and permanent value of its premiums to agents and subscribers, and it adds to its list this year two of the most desirable it has ever offered. Note the following:

The Great Bible Concordance.

Analytical Concordance to the Bible, on an entirely new plan, containing every word in alphabetical order arranged under its Hebrew or Greek original, with the literal meaning of each and its pronunciation; exhibiting 311,000 references, 112,000 beyond Cruden; marking 30,000 various readings in the New Testament; with the latest information on Biblical Geography and Antiquities, etc., etc. By Robert Young, LL.D., author of a new Literal Translation of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures; Concise Critical Comments on the same; a Grammatical Analysis of the Minor Prophets in Hebrew; Biblical Notes and Queries; Hebrew Grammar, etc., etc.

This great work was originally published in England in October, 1879, and was sold at $15. We can now offer it in connection with The Tribune at the following remarkably low rates:

For $6 the Concordance and one copy of The Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year.

For $11 the Concordance and one copy of The Semi-Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year, or ten copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

For $20 the Concordance and twenty copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

The postage on the Concordance is 40 cents, which the subscriber will remit if wishing it sent by mail. Except for short distances the mail will be cheaper than the express.

Our second new premium for this year is the following:

THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE

Embracing Chambers's Encyclopædia complete, omitting only some of the cuts, with extensive additions by an able corps of American editors, treating about 15,000 additional topics, thoroughly Americanizing the entire book, adding to it over 25 per cent of the latest, freshest and most valuable matter, the whole making 15 Handsome Octavo Volumes of 6 by 9½ inches in size, printed in large type on good, strong, calendered paper, and neat and substantially bound in cloth.

We can offer this valuable work in connection with The Tribune as follows:

For $15 The Library of Universal Knowledge complete in 15 octavo volumes, substantially bound in cloth as above described, and The Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $20 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and The Semi-Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $19 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and ten copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

For $28 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and twenty copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

Five volumes of the work are now ready, the sixth is nearly through the press, and the rest will rapidly follow. It will be sent by mail or express at the subscriber's expense. The postage, if sent by mail, will be 21 cents per volume. In packages, by express, they can be had much cheaper.

PROMPT WORK.

To induce quick work for this great premium we make the following most extraordinary offer:—With the first 2,000 orders received for The Library of Universal Knowledge we will send free, as a present from The Tribune, Macaulay's History of England, in three handsome volumes, printed on large type and good paper, and neatly bound in cloth.

These books, like the others, will be sent at subscriber's expense by mail or express. The postage on the three volumes will be 21 cents.

A Magnificent Gift!

Worcester's Great Unabridged Dictionary Free!

The New York Tribune will send at subscriber's expense for freight, or deliver in New York City free, Worcester's Great Unabridged Quarto Illustrated Dictionary, bound in sheep, edition of 1872, the very latest and very best edition of that great work, to any one remitting

$10 for a single five years' subscription in advance, or five one year subscriptions to the Weekly, or,

$15 for a single five years' subscription in advance, or five one year subscriptions to The Semi-Weekly, or one year's subscription to The Daily, or,

$30 for a single three years' subscription in advance to The Daily Tribune.

For one dollar extra the Dictionary can be sent by mail to any part of the United States, while for short distances the express is much cheaper.

The heirs of Wm. Easlick, deceased, have erected a $200 granite monument in Lake Ridge cemetery, said to be the most imposing as to workmanship and design in the township. Davis & Co. of Tecumseh did the work.

Grange election Friday evening the 24th.

There will be an Apron social and supper at the hall, Wednesday evening the 29th, to replenish the Ladies Mite. Everybody invited.

The Red Ribbon Club will give a musical entertainment at the hall on Saturday evening, Jan. 8th, which will embrace the church choir, Clem Lester's singing class, Prof. Hendershot's choir of Macon and singing class of Ridgeway, the Culbertson singers and other local talent. Door fee, 5 and 10 cents.

The 89th birthday of Mrs. Sarah Spaulding was celebrated at the residence of A. Easlick, the 18th inst. Children, grand-children and great-grand-children to the number of about thirty assembled to congratulate the aged matron. Presents consisting of dry goods, groceries, provisions and sixteen one dollar silver pieces were among the compliments. The recipient is highly elated.

About 8 o'clock, Tuesday evening, the 7th inst., Art. Anderson, living near G. V. Osgood, heard a turkey "yip, yip," and in looking out saw a gray team and wagon, with two men in hurrying by. Next morning he informed Mr. Osgood of the occurrence, who looked over his flock of turkeys and found that the old gobbler was missing. Mr. O. immediately took the trail, and being a great sportsman, although on a cold track, soon "pointed the game." A recital of the winding ways in which this case was worked up would be interesting, but too lengthy for this communication. Suffice it to say that on Wednesday, the 15th, Dept. Sheriff Merritt and A. Hyde, of Tecumseh, bro't Edwin McFall and Leonard VanHousen of East Milan, before Esq. Easlick, of Macon, charged with larceny of the turkey. The boys plead guilty, whereupon the court adjudged that the turkey be returned to Mr. Osgood, and the boys pay $15, or go to jail thirty days. They choose the former.—Mrs. Fred Van Housen, mother of Leonard, was lying in the wagon when the turkey was taken. She is still at large, but had better look a "leetle oud."

There will be a children's supper at the M. E. church on Friday evening for the scholars of the M. E. Sunday school.

The Pound Social at Mr. Hall's was a grand succeed, both socially and financially, and now a leap year entertainment, of the same nature, is the subject before the committee.

The engineers of the D. & B. road have been bothered by spikes being driven into the joints of the rails, also fence rails and other obstructions being placed upon the track. Now somebody must want trouble mighty bad.

Charles, a son of Stuart Balou, of Macon, was sent to Tecumseh to market a load of wheat on last Saturday, for which he received $60, and after imbibing freely of 40 rod started for home, soon becoming totally oblivious and had to be taken care of by his companions. He reached home minus the $60 and his pards, Brown, Cooley, Briggs and Vanduzer have been arrested on the charge of "going through him."

A "wooden wedding" at J.F.Schreder's in Clinton township on the 15th. Four generations of the family were represented by the oldest son of each. About forty persons were present and a good time was had. The presents were numerous and valuable.

Hon. Chas. Roberts, of Lansing, delivered an address on the political issues and finance at Ayers' Hall Tuesday evening to a full house. Mr. Roberts is an able speaker. It is expected that he will speak here again in a few weeks.

MACON.

A series of temperance lectures was recently held in this township by Miss Wadsworth, of Adrian. Two meetings were held in the village; one at the Grange hall, and one in the Reformed church of East Macon.

A change in the principalship of the Addison High School will doubtless soon be effected, Prof. Condict having resigned the position.

The Kline store will soon be headquarters for drugs and jewelry. Dr. Wm. Brown, proprietor.

Both the blacksmith shops here have been kept running day and night, almost, shoeing horses of late.

A new and tasty sign, bearing the name of J. A. Williams, shoemaker, hangs in front of Lapham's variety store.

Mr. G. M. Lewis, formerly of this place, has opened a store at Kelley's corners, as successor to Supervisor O.Kelly.

Messrs. O. B. Bowen, I. N. Hathaway and F. Curtis have been engaged in the interest of the proposed T. & M. R. R. during the past week.

A new and complete stock of dry goods are on hand at the store of A.A. Roberts on the west side of the creek. Purchasers can save a good per cent. on the investment by patronizing this house.

George W. Lewis, for the past ten years Superintendent of the Clinton Woolen Mills, has tendered his resignation to the company, to take effect immediately. Under the able management of George W. Lewis, as Superintendent, and J. S. Kies, as President, the Clinton Woolen Manufacturing company has now won a reputation second to no mill in the west for the high standard of goods manufactured, and to them great credit is due for conducting a business of such magnitude and of so vast importance, not only to the operatives and stockholders themselves but to the village and community at large, through the trying years from '73 to '76 and making it to-day one of the best paying investments in the northwest.

George Kishpaugh smiles all over to-day. The particular cause of his hilarity, is the advent of a new boarder into the family.

Old Mr. Burroughs is very low; in all probability he cannot remain this side of the dark river but a short time.

Mrs. O'Brien was to leave for California last week Thursday, but was taken ill. She is still confined to the house.

There is to be a Christmas tree at the Congregational church Christmas eve. A good time is anticipated by the juveniles, and an increased attendance on Sunday schools about these days.

Mr. James Haliday, Sen., is unable to sit up; by reason of sickness.

The ice houses in this section are all filled with first-class ice. There will be no ice famine next summer.

The masquerade ball is over and we breathe easy again. There were some fifty or more maskers. The music was very fine, of course it could not be otherwise with Boos and Hanna to direct.

KELLEY'S CORNERS.

We have been ringing merrily today at our school house. We have just purchased a splendid bell of Nathaniel Osborne, our agriculturalist. The committee that was appointed to purchase the bell looked very carefully at the hardware stores in several places and finally came to a wise conclusion, and purchased at home where they can get a good article and get it cheap.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Parker of this place celebrated their fifteenth anniversary at their residence, Monday evening, Dec. 20th. About 42 couple of invited guests were present. The following is a list of the several gifts:

After the presents had been inspected and all had had a good time, the guests were invited to a sumptuous repast (such as the good lady of the house only knows how to serve), which was partaken of in a manner that showed they enjoyed a good meal, after which they bid the married couple good night and wished them a long and happy life, and departed for their several homes.

Joseph Turner died Dec. 16th, of cancer in the stomach, aged 75 years.

Mrs. J. S. Briggs departed this morning for Missouri on a visit to her sisters at Cahoka of that State.

ROME.

Such a noted place as this deserves, we think, a small space in your most estimable paper in which to express now and then a passing word in regard to it and its environs.

The proprietors of the hotel are now engaged in filling their ice house, drawing their ice from Round Lake, a distance of five miles. Thirteen loads have already been deposited and still it comes. We should say they intend to keep cool for some time to come.

It is said that shortly after the holidays a series of dances will commence at the hotel.

Mr. Geo. Williams, an elderly gentleman, while getting out of his buggy in front of the hotel, fell, injuring his hip quite badly, but probably not fractured. He is now at the hotel and slowly improving.

For the past week or more Joseph Harris has been engaged in putting a well on his place. At the depth of 20 feet was struck what was called a good vein of water. Jo will no doubt avoid emptying cream into it as he thinks it did not better the water in the well across the road.

A large time is expected on Christmas eve at the Baptist church, 2 miles west of here. The program is Christmas tree, literary exercises, and Santa Claus, right from "Ould Zhermany." There will also be a tree at the church just east of here.

At the F. W. B. church meetings are held twice a day with large attendance. The meetings commence respectively at 10 A.M. and 7 P.M. Elder Chase is conducting them. As yet no great number have espoused the good way.

The young people's debating society west of here, meet once a week, at the Brooks' school house. They are well attended.

FRANKLIN.

A mistake occurred in our correspondence two weeks ago in relation to the day the township treasurer would be at the Corners. It should have read Friday instead of Thursday, which is the day he remains at home.

Col. Roberts spoke at Tuttle's hall on Friday evening last to a full house, and is a speaker of unusual ability. He spoke at Springville last evening, speaks at Tecumseh to-night, and here again on Friday evening, when it is hoped more of the old parties will attend.

Speaking of politics, has not the correspondent of the Adrian Times from this town commenced the spring campaign rather early? At all events, as regards the supervisorship. So far as the present incumbent is concerned, he appreciates the magnanimity displayed in allowing him to serve out the balance of the term, and is willing the majority shall determine as to his successor when the time arrives.

Carl Burger weighs more to the square inch than any man on the turnpike. It's a boy.

The Congregational society have succeeded in raising a sufficient amount to feel warranted in engaging Prof. Lowry, and are highly elated thereat.

Don't forget the oyster supper next Tuesday afternoon and evening. A good time is anticipated.

Prof. Lowry proposes giving a series of Friday evening lectures on English history and English literature, which from his experience as professor of that branch of education, cannot fail to prove interesting and profitable.

Mr. Decker is building a commodious ice house, preparatory to starting a meat market in the near future, and having had considerable experience in that line, we hope he will succeed, as it will prove a great convenience to this community.

Several of our citizens are jointly filling Mr. Tuttle's ice house with ice, so we shall be able to keep cool next summer.

TECUMSEH merchants never had a better holiday trade than they have enjoyed thus far this winter.

HER LAST LETTER.

BY LADY LINDSAY.

"Tis but a line, a hurried scrawl,
And little seems the words to say,
Yet bold me to reproaches thrall:
"You quarrelled with me yesterday;
To-morrow you'll be sad."

Ay, "you'll be sad" the words are true,
And yet they pierce my soul with pain.
Ay, "you'll be sad," the words are true;
They hasted at some prophetic strain:
"To-morrow you'll be sad."

We quarrelled, and for what? a word,
A thoughtless word in the moment thrown,
And that, or as it seemed, the cause
They came not with the morn,
To-morrow you'll be sad.

Few words, but sad, sad regret,
Tender, blighted, and yet sweet—
Sad, sad words I read, and yet
Fraught with more pain than sight,
"To-morrow you'll be sad."

In the Palace of Truth.

Richard Turner, Esq., a lawyer, let us hope of future fame, sauntered home one a certain dainty little note awaiting him on his mantlepiece. It had just come, his landlady said, and slowly tearing open the envelope, Dick read as follows:

MY DEAR MR. TURNER—Many thanks for your lovely flowers, which have been greatly admired. It was like your thoughtfulness to remember my birth-day when I had almost forgotten it myself. I was so sorry to have missed your call this afternoon.

Sincerely yours, FLORENCE REDIFER.

A very gracious little note, but for some reason it appeared to afford its reader but small satisfaction. Dick read it twice with a curling lip, then tossing it into the scrap basket, he lit a cigar, stretched himself in an easy chair and thoughtfully observed through the smoke wreaths that began to float around his head: "What a precious little liar she is! As if I didn't see her ten minutes after she was 'not at home' to me this afternoon, start out driving with Tom Baker in that confoundedly jerky dog cart of his. Shouldn't wonder if he had jerked her off before they got home: and served her right too! Why, Snip, what is the matter with you sir?"

Snip was the skye terrier, who, failing to understand why he had been slighted, was seeking to secure his master's notice by sitting upright and waving his front paws to and fro in a gentle and deprecating fashion.

"Did I hurt your feelings, poor little boy?" said Dick, tenderly. "Well, I wouldn't, I assure you, for a dozen little flirts like Florence Redifer, but I do think, Snip, and I expect you to agree with me, that we would all be much better off if women and men, too, would say out truthfully what was in their minds instead of this eternal beating around the bush. Why can't people be a little more candid with their fellow-creatures instead of fooling them to the top of their bent and then laughing behind their backs? Do you know, Snip?"

Snip didn't know, but he was the last dog in the world to confess his ignorance, so assuming a look of wisdom which Solomon might have envied, he gave a mysterious little bark that could mean anything and composed himself to listen.

"Just 8 o'clock," said Dick, consulting his watch. "In two hours I've got to dress and go to Mrs. Grey's ball, the biggest bore of the season I haven't a doubt; but there's no escaping it. Aren't you glad, Snip, you don't have to go to balls?"

Snip barked again, this time in an affirmative manner. He always accommodated himself to his master's moods, and was well accustomed to being questioned. Alert and vigilant, he watched the cigar dwindle down by slow degrees, while he wanted in well-bred silence for a renewal of the conversation. But Dick was drowsy and cross, and when the cigar was smoked out he turned his head aside and fell fast asleep, while his little dog curled contentedly around his feet, looking up into his master's face with a world of patient love in his honest brown eyes.

Seven, eight, nine, ten! Was it possible that he had slept nearly two hours and the clock was really striking ten? Dick jumped up, glanced at his watch to make sure, and with a stifled groan prepared to induct himself into his dress suit. This was never a very rapid process with him, and by the time he entered Mrs. Grey's brilliantly lit-up house the great clock in the hall was pointing to a quarter past 11.

The rooms were crowded and suffocatingly hot. The very flowers appeared to droop under the glare and the heat, all except some deep red roses which had been arranged in a sentence over the doorway, and whose glowing hearts presented the most sumptuous and intense hue of color even in that many-hued apartment. It was strange! but Dick found himself unable to read that sentence, although composed of only three short words. The language, even the letters, were unknown to him, and for half a minute he stood puzzling over the mystery. Then the incoming crowd gently shoved him aside, and abandoning the effort, he made the best of his way toward his hostess. A pretty little woman, magnificently dressed, but seemingly already much fatigued with the work in hand, she half smiled as Dick edged up to her.

"Have you just come, Mr. Turner?" she said. "I thought you were to be one of my early birds."

"So I would have been," he explained, "only, unfortunately, I fell asleep and had not waken up in time."

"Oh! that was the case, was it? Well, such a laughable nap ought to brighten you up beautifully for the rest of the evening. Sometimes, you know, you are rather stupid."

Dick looked at her to see if she meant a joke, but her pretty face was gravely calmed to his. "You are flattering me," he said, shortly.

"I don't mean to, indeed," she answered, quite earnestly. "But there are plenty of men who are always stupid, while you can be rather entertaining, when you are at your best," and she turned gently from him to greet a new batch of guests.

"Was I ever damned with such faint praise before?" thought Dick. "I wonder if I am 'at my best' to-night?"

For a minute he stood, taking a survey of the scene before him. The musicians were playing a waltz, and playing it well; only strange to say there was a flute among them, which came piping in with its shrill persistent little treble in a manner distracting to Dick's over-sensitive ear. He thought of Mozart's saying that the only thing in the world worse than a flute in an orchestra was two flutes, and wondered at Mrs. Grey's choice in music. Nevertheless, as long as he was there he might as well dance, and looking around for familiar faces, his first glance fell upon a brown-eyed maiden whom he had met at a party only the week before, and whom he had admired with the goaded and half-supercilious admiration of a veteran society man. In another minute they were on the floor contending with their fellow-dancers for a little room in which to whirl around, and seemingly successful in their struggle, until a slight lurch sent them rather suddenly against another pair of dancers.

"That was stupid, wasn't it?" said Dick, as they stopped to take breath after the concession.

"Yes," replied she of the brown eyes, raising them frankly to his face. "You are rather a poor dancer. Perhaps you are out of practice?"

"Indeed I ought not to be," protested Dick, in unutterable indignation at the [illegible] more in my life than I have this winter."

"Is that so? It must be awkwardness then," said his companion, gently. "Some people never can thoroughly learn. I think it is a natural gift."

Dick wondered if he could have heard aright or if that wretched little flute, still piping away so complacently, had absolutely bewildered him. If there was one thing he prided himself on more than another—one gift, natural or otherwise, which he felt sure of possessing—it was his dancing. Was the brown-eyed damsel out of her mind or was she simply an ill-bred little thing, who did not know a good dancer from a bad one? Whichever was the case he lost no time in getting rid of her, and still mute with amazement and disgust, took refuge among a group of men at the door.

"You here, Turner!" said one of them. "I hardly recognized you at first, you look so yellow and thin."

"Do I, indeed?" said Dick, shortly, and wondering what he was doomed to hear next.

"I should rather think you did," was the friendly answer. "I just said to Smith, here, as you came up, that between your sallow skin and that bald spot on your head, you were beginning to look like an old man before your time. Why don't you take to country life and early hours and freshen up a bit?"

"Why don't you mind your own affairs and kindly leave me to attend to mine?" retorted Dick, now thoroughly aroused, and without waiting for another word he veered around and left the group, who, one and all, seemed profoundly astonished at his ill temper.

By this time he began to feel a little uncertain who to approach next. Having been told already that he was stupid, ugly and a bad dancer, what was there left for him to hear. He certainly had never met so many disagreeable people in his life and he had serious thoughts of beating a permanent retreat, when he caught sight of a blonde head half hidden beneath the palms in the conservatory. It was Florence Redifer, whom he had never expected to meet to-night and whom two hours ago he would have intentionally avoided. But for some reason the contempt for her flattery and falsehood had been strangely modified in so short a time and he felt a positive yearning to listen again to her pretty nothings [illegible] see her blue eyes uplifted with a tender glance of admiring trustfulness to his. It must have cost her a great deal of time and patience to cultivate the glance up to its present perfection and it was unkind, after all, to sneer at the result of such honest and endeavoring toil.

The next minute he was by her side. She looked very pretty; her fair hair tumbled in some mysterious fashion on the top of her shapely little head; her bright face lit up with smiles, and her white silk gleaming among the colored plants with a soft and shifting radiance that pleased Dick's enfeebled eye. He was not one of those to whom a woman's gown is a matter of indifference.

"I came in here for a little air," she said; "the rooms are so terribly hot, and the whole affair is very stupid. Don't you think so?"

"It has been worse than stupid for me," he answered, laughing. "I have been insulted wherever I went. First, Mrs. Gray told me I was often very stupid, then Miss Vincent, do you know her? She is dancing now with Tom Stern."

"I don't know her; but never mind! What did she say to you?"

"She told me I was awkward and a bad dancer, and intimated that I could never thoroughly learn."

Florence Redifer burst into a laugh as clear and merry as silver bells. "But you know, Mr. Turner," she said, "your best friends do not claim for you that you dance well."

Dick gasped and then recovered; he was getting hardened now. "I always flattered myself I did," he said boldly.

She looked at him in some surprise. "Of course, I don't mean to say," she explained, "that one cannot get around with you at all, but only that you are not very graceful and sure-footed. There are plenty of men here who dance worse—Mr. Simpson, for instance.

"I should hope so," said Dick, as Simpson, a little weak-eyed man, who held his fair partner as if he feared she was packed with dynamite and was in danger every minute of exploding, moved laboriously past the door. "If that is the best you can say for me, Miss Florence, I shall never have the audacity to ask you to dance again," and with a heavy heart he left the conservatory, now fully satisfied he had had enough of Mrs. Grey's ball.

He took a glass of champagne in the supper-room, where its quality was being freely discussed by the young men who hungered there, and went back to pay his parting respects to his hostess. There were still plenty of people about, but a chill seemed to have fallen on them, the dancers were few, and everybody looked bored or discontented. Mrs. Grey was saying the last words to a party of guests who were about taking their departure.

"Such a pity it should have been a failure," he heard one of them whisper in a tone of sympathy. "And after all the expense you have gone to!"

"I am sure, then, it must have been the fault of my guests," returned Mrs. Grey, "for I did my part as well as I could. Why, Mr. Turner, are you going so soon? I wonder if you, too, found my party a stupid one?"

She looked so harassed that Dick forgot the grudge he owed her, and would gladly have declared her ball both brilliant and delightful, but the words he wished to say stuck in his throat—he absolutely could not give them utterance. An awful impulse was upon him, and to his own secret horror and dismay he heard himself assuring her the painful truth that it was the most dismal affair he had ever witnessed in his life. Then overwhelmed with shame at his involuntary rudeness he turned away, and his eyes fell upon the crimson roses still blooming mutely over the doorway.

What an idea he must have been! There in plain English letters were the three words, "Palace of Truth." As he looked and read, the magic flute pealed forth so loudly and with so shrill a triumph in its tone that Dick fairly jumped, and in the violence of his start kicked the sleeping Snip, who leaped out of his master's way and gazed at him with reproachful, wonderful eyes.

"Eleven o'clock, as I am a living man!" said Dick, yawning. "Three hours asleep and no ball for me to-night. Snip, you little villain, why didn't you awaken me?"

Snip was silent. He felt the arrant injustice of this remark, and bore it with the equanimity of a stoic.

"Well," said his master, slowly, as he lit his candle, "since you did not, and as I have had all the dissipation and all the candor I need for one night, I think, little dog, that you and I will go peacefully and gratefully to bed."

Fishes on the Amazon.

Much attention has lately been given to the wonders of the great river Amazon, or "the Amazons," as the people here call it. Its whole valley abounds in streams that help to make up the enormous volume of waters. These spread into lakes, lagoons and swamps that extend over large regions of country. This is especially so in the rainy seasons of good times.

The channels and lakes are abundantly supplied with fishes. Even large fishes are often left in the swamp lakes and streams when the water is low. A hundred different kinds of fish can be bought in the markets of Rio, many of which come from the Amazon.

Those most valued are pirarucus and tucunus. They are the largest, while there are numerous smaller varieties. The Indians catch the latter with hooks and lines or shoot them with arrows. But the larger fish are speared with a kind of trident. The men and even small boys acquire great skill in the use of these implements.

In the summer months the people come by hundreds to the lakes and channels to fish for the great pirarucu, and to repare the fish much as codfish is prepared by the northern fishermen. Some of these fish are seven or eight feet in length. They are first dressed and cut into wide, thin slices. These are well rubbed with salt and hung on poles to dry in the sun. The slices are taken under cover every night and carried out again in the morning. The stranger does not at once relish this dried fish, yet it is the standard flesh food of all the poorer classes throughout a large part of Brazil. During the fishing season the people build and live in little huts along the shores. Traders, in canoes, come with a stock of cheap wares to barter for the fish. Thus a trading community is formed, which breaks up with the January floods. The piranhas are much prized and are easily caught, for they are greedy to bite at most anything, from a bit of salt meat to a bather's toe. Boys thrash the water with poles to attract these fishes.

The Tupi word piranha is a contraction of pira sainha, meaning "toothed fish." The same word is used by the Indians to describe a pair of scissors. There are several species of these savage piranhas, some being more than two feet long. They make nothing of biting an ounce or so of flesh from a man's leg. People are sometimes killed by them. Hence Brazilians are shy of going into these lakes and streams if they suspect the presence of these fish. The fishermen claim that piranhas will gather in schools against the larger fish and attack them. If one of their own number is at all wounded by mistake he is mercilessly set upon and devoured by his companions.

It is useless to try to use nets where this fish is found. They would spoil a net in a few minutes.

Another dangerous fish of these waters is the sting-ray. He lies flat on the bottom, his dark upper surface being hardly seen through the muddy streams. If left undisturbed the creature is harmless enough. But a careless wader in the shallows may step on the flat body, and then the great barbed sting inflicts a wound that benumbs the whole body and makes the sufferer speechless with pain. Persons have been lamed for life by such a wound.—Scientific American.

The Potato.

Much of the so-called cognac which is imported into England from France is the product of the potato. Throughout Germany the same uses are common. In Poland the manufacture of spirits from the potato is a most extensive trade. "Siletun brandy," well known in commerce, is largely imported into England, and is sent from thence to many of her foreign possessions as the product of the grape, and is placed on many a table of England as the same, while fair ladies perfume themselves with the spirit of potato, under the designation eau de Cologne. But there are other uses which this esculent is turned to abroad. After extracting the farina the pulp is manufactured into ornamental articles, such as picture frames, snuff-boxes and several descriptions of toys, and the water that runs from it in the process of manufacture is a most valuable scourer. For perfectly cleansing woolens and such like articles it is the housewife's panacea, and if the washerwoman happens to have chilblains she becomes cured by the operation.

LEBTIE HAMPTON, a colored woman living in Union county, South Carolina, gave birth to two children of the Siamese-twin order. They are joined together by a union of the breast-bone, having but one navel, but supposed to have two sets of intestines confined in one cavity. They are living and attracting much attention.

THE HERALD FOR 1881.

Thirty years ago on the 25th day of May last the initial number of the TECUMSEH HERALD greeted its patrons. Through all the succeeding years, it has sent its weekly message among the homes of Northern Lenawee, and exerted its humble influence for the business up-building of this portion of the Master's vineyard. Into all his ups and downs in life, it has been buffeted by the storms of adversity, and has basked in the sunshine of prosperity. But the days of uncertainty in the HERALD's history have passed. It has become one of the fixed institutions of this community. It has come to stay.

Improvement and progress are the watchwords of the present age. The whole country is feeling the hilarious effects of a grand business boom, and the newspaper fraternity, being among the first to feel the quickening impulse, are extending their lines, advancing their outposts, making new conquests and gaining new victories. In making the local history of this section of Michigan during the coming twelve months, the HERALD will occupy its accustomed position in the front rank. It has already achieved the distinction of being the best local newspaper in Lenawee county, and it will be a better local family paper during the year 1881 than it has ever been hitherto.

ITS CHARACTER.

A word in regard to its general character.

The HERALD has never been and never claimed to be a neutral paper.—It has always been—since the present owner conducted it—an independent paper, and such it will continue to be. The HERALD will be the organ of no party, sect or clique; but it must not be supposed that it will have no opinions of its own. We shall freely express our views on all topics, whether of a political, religious, social, temperance or general character.

While we shall endeavor to eschew all mere partisan debate in politics, we shall devote more attention and space than heretofore to the discussion of free trade and the tariff, of civil service reform, of revenue reform, of currency and trade, and all those economical and financial questions which are pressing themselves upon the people for solution. Party lines are fading away. People are looking more to principles and less to names. The voters of all parties are ready to discard "machine" politics, and to enlighten themselves upon those great questions of governmental policy on which parties must divide in the near future.

As a local family newspaper the HERALD will continue to be the leading organ in the towns of Northern Lenawee. It will be a faithful mirror of the social and business life of this vicinity.

ITS SPECIAL FEATURES.

1. A full assortment of local news from its regular township and neighborhood correspondents.
2. A good story and other reading matter for the "Family Circle."
3. A department of "County News" gleaned from the county press.
4. A carefully edited department of "State News."
5. An original "Washington Letter" during each session of Congress.
6. A "Farmers' Page," which will be devoted to general agricultural news and the reports of all farmers' clubs within our jurisdiction.
7. A column of extracts each week from the leading independent and party newspapers.
8. A live local department, devoted specially to Tecumseh news, supplemented with an illustrated corner each week.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Our subscription rates for 1881 will be $1.50 per year, cash in advance.

PREMIUMS.

To each new subscriber receiving his paper at a post office in Lenawee county, who shall pay cash in advance for one year, we will give a premium receipt book, entitled "The Home Guide." This is one of the best family receipt books ever published, and is worth at retail fifty cents. Subscribers sending in their names at once will be credited to Jan. 1, 1882. They will get the remaining numbers for December free. Old subscribers will receive the "Home Guide" on the same terms as new ones, upon the payment of all arrears up to the present time.

The HERALD for one year, and Page's Map of Michigan, will be furnished for $2.00. The retail price of the map alone is $2.00.

This Map of Michigan is published by H. R. Page & Co., of Chicago, and is the best state Map in the market. It is 31 by 40 inches in size, mounted on rollers, contains a complete postoffice index, and every railroad in the state.

The HERALD for one year, and Webster's Pictorial Dictionary, will be furnished for $5.00, which is the price of the Dictionary alone.

This Dictionary contains 1040 pages and 600 engravings. It is rapidly taking the place of the unabridged, being just as good for ordinary use, and costing less than one-half as much.

These premiums will all be withdrawn on the first day of February next—Dec. 1st, 1880.

GREENBACK MEETING.

The Greenbackers in this vicinity have commenced their campaign for '84. They have decided to hold public meetings from time to time and to endeavor to proselyte men to their doctrines and to establish themselves firmly as a national party.

Immediately after a vigorous campaign the people are not generally prone to listen to the politicians' harangues and especially so when the holidays are so near by, nevertheless a number of the citizens congregated at Armory Hall last evening to hear the speech of Colonel Roberts, of Lansing. The greater paat of the speech consisted of scathing rebukes against the older parties. He advocated a free and almost unlimited issue of paper currency by the government, saying that he had rather have the streets knee deep with greenbacks than the houses one-quarter of an inch thick with mortgages. He seemed to labor under the impression that the farmers in this vicinity did not have sufficient means to clothe themselves, and that the community in general was on the verge of bankruptcy. He made this idea the basis of his arguments. He finally drifted into the woman suffrage question and made an eloquent plea in behalf of women, and seemed to think that the right of suffrage should be granted as generally and liberally as he would have the issue of paper money. In short he wanted labor to be king, an unlimited issue of paper money and general suffrage. Mr. Roberts is a good speaker and he deserved a larger audience.

THE Regents of the State University have given the gymnasium question a candid consideration, and in their coming report to the legislature will undoubtedly unanimously recommend that an appropriation be made for the erection of it. The students, through their zealous efforts during the past three years, have accumulated several hundred dollars, which fund has been increased from time to time by liberal donations from patrons of the institution, so that the legislature will be asked for an amount sufficient to cover only the expense af a good substantial building, to be equipped with apparatus by the fund raised by the students. Such an appropriation ought to be granted.

"Most perfect of Juvenile Magazines," is what the Detroit Free Press calls St. Nicholas. Its growth in England is keeping pace with its success in this country, and the English papers are as unanimous in praise of its beauties as the American press. The "wonderful Christmas number," just issued, the first edition of which is 105,000, is a grandly illustrated Holiday book of one hundred pages, containing, besides its capital Christmas and fairy stories, and original pictures by the best American artists, the first chapters of two splendid serials—one, a story of the adventures, in the American tropics, of a party engaged in the capture of wild animals for a menagrie, and a humorous serial by Rossiter Johnson. A year's subscription to St. Nicholas is a holiday gift the influence and the joy of which is felt twelve times a year. The North American recently declared, "It would puzzle any one to say in what respect St. Nicholas could be improved."—Subscriptions beginning with the beautiful Christmas (December) number will commence the two serials mentioned. Price, $3.00 a year. The Christmas number is for sale everywhere for 30 cents. Published by Scribner & Co., 743 Broadway, New York.

A delightful feature of Scribner for this year is a series of sparkling novelettes, or condensed novels, instead of the usual long serial story. Mrs. Shayer's "Tiger-Lily," which was begun in November. Mrs. Burnett's novelette, the story of an American girl in England, a sort of Daisy Miller, is to begin in the February Midwinter Number, with a twenty-two page supplement, and will run through three issues. In May, "Madame Delphine" a story of life in New Orleans, by G. W. Cable, begins, and this will be followed by Boyesen's "Queen Titania," and Miss Osgood's "Toinette's Governess."

LETTER FROM DELAWARE.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 13, 1880.

EDITOR HERALD:

According to promise, Dear Herald, to let you hear from a voluntary exile from home, I seat myself in the little room of my boarding house, over 600 miles from my native State and the lovely little village of Tecumseh, to write you of my welfare and safe arrival in the Diamond State. Leaving home on the 4 P.M. train on Tuesday, Dec. 9th, via Toledo and Dashler, O., over the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., after the delays of winter railroad travel, we reached the "City of Oysters," Baltimore. Two hours ride over the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore road brings the weary traveler to this great manufacturing town, and here I expect to remain a short time. Beautiful for situation, between the Brandywine and Christiana rivers, with the Delaware for its eastern boundary, in the heart of a fertile and prosperous agricultural region is located the city of Wilmington, with a resident population of 40,000. Its delightful suburbs contain 3,000 more. Its real estate amounts to $23,000,000, and the personal property of the city $20,000,000. The city proper covers an area of about eight square miles, and contains nearly fifty churches, seventeen public schools, sixteen private schools and seminaries, eight banks, ten newspapers, a fine opera house, public fountains, monuments, etc. The chief business is manufacturing. A stranger scaning the city the early morning can see the smoke ascending from hundreds of chimneys and hear the screech of innumerable whistles, calling the workmen to their various factories. He would then be fully assured that Wilmington was a busy hive of industry. Over $12,000,000 capital is employed, and the value of articles manufactured amount to annually over $21,000,000. It would be utterly impossible for me in one short letter to give you any idea as to the magnitude of its manufacturing interests. I will therefore reserve that for future letters.

As one great object in my visit here was to learn of its climate and test it to my own satisfaction, this will take some time, I may therefore remain here some weeks. Climate is the result principally of latitude and altitude, proportion of land and water, texture of soil, etc. The large surrounding surface of water has much to do in moderating the severity of the climate. A glance at the map shows the position of this State in this respect, although the altitude of the larger portion is not much over one hundred feet above tide level. Its latitude is such as to produce neither a hot nor a cold climate. The oceanic currents, the Gulf stream, and the return current passing along the coast greatly effects the climate. The mean temperature for summer is 74°-77°; for winter 34°-38°; for the year 54°-58°. The winters are said to be short and mild, the mercury rarely falling to zero, and the earth seldom freezing many inches in depth. The summers are long and pleasant, giving abundant time for the culture and growth of all kinds of grains, vegetables, fruits and flowers. I have not yet visited any of the agricultural districts, therefore cannot tell you of its farms and farm products. As to the health of this place I can only say it is attested by the large frames, the fresh color and the vigor of its inhabitants. There are to-day numbers of persons, residents of this Peninsula, once sufferers from bronchitis, asthma, quinsy, catarrh, and lung complaints, whose troubles have been relieved and whose lives prolonged by making Delaware their home. But I must close this before I weary your patience, and perhaps more anon. P. W. A.

A Little Doubtful.

New York Tribune, (Rep.): Even the limber-chinned Beck is willing to devote himself strictly to business this winter. He says he shall oppose a holiday recess of Congress for any longer period than a week, believing that the members ought to attend to business, and drink their Christmas and New Year whisky in Washington. Beck speaks like a true Bourbon. A Republican would have said Christmas turkey instead of whisky.

Let Them Pay for Their Own Lather.

New York Times, (Rep.): The Senators of the United States are shaved and shampooned at the public expense. In the general readjustment of tonsorial arrangements about the Capitol which will doubtless follow the recent fire, it is to be hoped that the members of the upper House will be shamed into imitating the Representatives of the people at the other end of the Capitol and hereafter pay for their own shaving.

Good News for Pittsburg.

Cincinnati Enquirer, (Dem.): In Pittsburg stoves are being introduced in the street cars, and we read that the innovation is hailed with delight. Any thing that will make two flakes of soot fall on a man's nose where one fell before will bring joy to the heart of the average Pittsburg citizen. Still, we wish the stove experiment success.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

RETURN OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19, 1880.

One event outside of Congress attracted more attention this week than anything than has occurred in that body. This was the return of General Grant and the reception extended him by the organizations of "Boys in Blue" and other veteran and political associations. The demonstration was one of considerable magnitude, and as the hero of the occasion passed up Pennsylvania Avenue at the head of the procession, seated in a carriage with Generals Logan, Burnside, and Hawley, he was greeted with cheers and salutes on every hand. To many of the vast throng that lined the streets he was personally known, at least by sight, and it seemed like the greeting to an old friend, but there were others in the crowd attracted there by curiosity to see a man who has had such homage paid him all over the world. There may have been a few like the individual who remarked in my hearing that he had "never seen Grant or heard Pinafore." To those who had not seen the ex-President since he left Washington nearly four years ago the increase of grey hairs and other traces of advancing years were plainly visible. But he is still the short, square faced, quiet, and determined looking man we used to see riding along our streets.

The arrival of General Grant has recalled a few pleasant reminiscences in congressional circles. One little story told of a Veteran Democratic Representative touches upon the investigation era which began in 1875 and has continued with varying degrees of vigor down to the last year. Said the Congressmen: "I was cast on the committee investigating expenditures in the Navy Department. Our committee called on Secretary Thompson, laboring under a very pronounced impression that we had the bulge on him in that little matter of transporting General Grant on United States men-of-war. I said, "Mr. Secretary, what authority had you for incurring the expense of transporting General Grant across the Mediterranean on his way to the East?" He replied, "I assumed that authority, sir.' 'But, said I, where did you get the money from?' 'From my contingent fund,' was the reply. Just then it flashed upon me big as a hay stack that we had the ancient mariner on the hip, but he interrupted me and said, 'You perhaps do not fully understand the matter.—When our vessels are cruising we keep up steam, and our expenses are relatively about the same throughout. When General Grant was carried across the Mediterranean the actual cost of the voyage was $31.65 for harbor dues." This settled it. The African in the wood-pile seemed most too small an object for a legislative report.

It is evident that the attitude of the Republicans in Congress has somewhat sapped the enthusiasm of the Democrats as to their ability to pass the joint resolution for counting the electoral vote. After all the time spent upon it the majority are at present unable to pass it even by the application of the previous question, because they have no quorum on their own side.—The Republicans by refusing to vote could prevent any effective vote. The matter is now virtually stood over until after the holidays, when the Democrats expect to have all their members here, making a quorum without Republican votes. It is their purpose to pass the resolution and I think they will succeed, but I do not apprehend that any dangerous results touching the approaching count are to be anticipated. Whether the resolution is passed or not all the votes belonging to General Garfield will be counted for him without a question.—This non-attendance of members is a very trying thing sometimes. For instance, the majority were kept nearly two weeks from electing a postmaster of the House—that office having been made vacant by death during vacation because had the vote been taken sooner a Republican would have been elected.

Rumors about approaching Supreme Court changes have been afloat for more than a month past, but each one has been followed with a denial, so that only the knowing ones could tell what to expect. Now, however, the transformation has commenced, Justice Strong having retired, Judge William B. Woods, of Alabama, has been named to take his place. Judge Woods is a staunch Republican and has been in charge of a Southern circuit of the U. S. District Court. Justice Swayne will tender his resignation soon after the holidays, and Stanley Matthews is to be appointed in his place. The death of Justice Clifford is expected at any moment. He is now unable even to dictate a complete sentence and hence could not tender his resignation, but unless some very important change should occur in his condition another vacancy will soon exist, which is to be filled by the appointment of Attorney General Devens. Then a bill to retire Justice Hunt is to be passed by Congress.

The Times for 1881.

THE TIMES will enter the New Year with a larger circle of regular readers than it had at any previous period of its history, and the important events of the next year must steadily enlarge the field of independent journalism.

A new administration will be inaugurated; new political occasions will create new political duties; the great commercial and industrial prosperity of the country must stimulate progress and thrift in all sections, and the tendency of political power will be toward corruption and despotism, as it ever is when the people are diverted from the stern criticism of authority by peace and plenty.

THE TIMES will be in the future, as it has been in the past, absolutely independent of political parties, but earnestly and fearlessly devoted to integrity and patriotism in our statesmanship and to the freedom and sanctity of the ballot. Dependent party organs will continue to babble about party men and party measures; to excuse the public jobber and the demagogue; to suppress, pervert or deny the truth when party interests demand it, and to lavish the regulation praise of the servant to the master; but the growing intelligence of the age daily multiplies the readers of the independent newspaper, and the journals which best reflect the rapidly increasing independence of the people will be the great American journals of the future.

THE TIMES aims to reach the highest standard of the independent newspaper. It fearlessly opposes corruptionists and rings in all parties, whether in city, State or nation. It opposes every form of imperial political denominations, whether represented by an individual, by a faction or by a party. It opposes sectionalism North and South as the demon of the Republic, and it demands public tranquility and the supremacy of liberty and law for every citizen of the Union.

THE TIMES will begin the New Year strengthened in all its already exceptionally strong departments. Its Annals of the War will be continued in the WEEKLY EDITION, with specially interesting extracts therefrom in the other editions, and the contributors for 1881 to this important feature of the paper will be from the most distinguished soldiers and civilians of both North and South. Its large list of contributors in this and in foreign countries will be more than maintained; its reliable news correspondence is unsurpassed by that of any other journal of the country; its various departments essential to a complete newspaper for the home and family circle are constantly enlivened by fresh writers, and it will maintain the position it has won solely on its merits, as one of the most reliable and complete newspapers of the world.

TERMS: DAILY—delivered by carriers, for twelve cents a week; mail subscription, six dollars a year, or fifty cents a month, postage free. SUNDAY EDITION—Double sheet, two dollars a year, postage free; single copies, four cents. WEEKLY—Published every Saturday morning, two dollars a year; five copies, $8; ten copies, $15; twenty copies, $25. An extra copy sent free to the getter-up of a club.

Buckle's explanation of the decline of the spirit of religious persecution, was that in modern times faith had undergone an eclipse, and men could not bring themselves to persecute others into believing that whereof they were themselves skeptical. The inadequateness of this explanation of one of the most striking social phenomena of our time, is forcibly shown in the North American Review for January, by Prof. John Fiske, who assigns a number of other causes that have been at least as influential in bringing about this most desirable result. First, there is the decline of the martial spirit and the greater devotion to pacific industrial pursuits. Then as men rise in the scale of civilization, they are less disposed to be domineering. Finally, men in modern times have quite lost the sense of corporate responsibility—the belief that a whole community is liable for the offenses of each individual comprised in it. These points are established with all the ingenuity of reasoning and wealth of learning for which the author is so distinguished. The Review is sold by booksellers and newsdealers generally.

THE juveniles under the charge of Misses Mary Frazer and Manie Monagan in our public schools showed their appreciation of their respective teachers by unexpectedly going to the home of Miss Frazer on last Saturday afternoon, and to the home of Miss Monaghan last Tuesday evening and presenting to each a gift that will long be remembered by them.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

MERRY Christmas.

LAST Tuesday was the shortest day in the year.

MISS CLARA CAMPBELL is home from the East.

THE schools close this week for one week of vacation.

GEORGE BANGS feels pretty happy now; and he has good reason for feeling happy too.

REV. WM. GRANDY preached at Adrian last Sunday by appointment of the Presbytery.

ONE item of A. W. Slayton's great furniture sale at the Opera House was seventeen bureaus.

A. W. SLAYTON has taken an agency for some of the best Pianos and Organs to be found in the market.

SMITH'S paper mill is booming these days. The wood and straw are coming in and the paper is going out.

MRS. EDWIN MUNN nee Mattie Heck, of Flowerfield, is spending the holidays with her friends in this place.

WALLIE GRAY has at present forty-seven lamps to care for; he generally makes the round in one hour and a half.

THE University closed last Friday evening for the Holiday vacation and the Tecumseh boys came home forthwith.

VENNOR'S eleven feet of snow was due yesterday, but there seems to be some hitch in the program somewhere.

JIM COLE had a walking advertisement on the street yesterday, in shape of a fine fat steer gaily bedecked with ribbons.

OFFICERS Merritt and Hyde have been unusually busy during the past week in looking up transgressors of the laws.

ORIN GILLMAN has purchased the stock of William Gaston and will hereafter run the grocery business at that point.

MISS HATTIE CROSWELL, of Adrian, is acting as private secretary to her father, and has charge of the executive office at Lansing.

MISS ADELE WHITENACK, who has been attending the State Normal School during the past term, is home to spend the Holidays.

GEO. IMERSON, who has been landlord of the lower hotel for a number of months back, has leased his building to J. F. Emery, of Adrian, who took possession the first part of the week.

FRANK BUMANN started for New York yesterday to be gone about two weeks. He has lately shipped several car loads of poultry and he goes down to personally attend to selling the same.

IF IT is to be Conger or Bagley, we say Bagley, a man who, whether in private or in public life, has always been a liberal supporter of all enterprises connected with the best interests of the State.

WE saw a fine sight at McCowen's furniture rooms yesterday. It was a line of goods piled up the entire length of the second floor of articles to be delivered to-morrow evening. His delivery clerk will have an all night's job before him.

READ the prospectus elsewhere of the N. Y. Tribune. Any one who wishes a stalwart Republican paper cannot do better than subscribe for the paper which was founded by Horace Greeley. It is one of the best and cheapest newspapers published in this country.

WE regret to learn that Miss Alice Cairns, daughter of Robt. Cairns of this township is lying critically ill.—She was taken suddenly sick last Thursday night. It was feared for a time that she might not recover, but her friends think that the danger is now over.

DR. R. B. HOUSE has been fitting up the commodious room in the rear of his office proper for a private apartment. It is elegantly papered, carpeted and furnished. The Doctor has a splendid suite of office rooms now. It is well worth one's while to make him a call, whether one needs any pills or not.

REMEMBER John R. Clark's lecture next Monday evening. He will deliver his justly celebrated effort entitled "To and Fro in London." It has been given once in Tecumseh, but all who heard it will be glad to hear it again, while those who did not should certainly avail themselves of this opportunity.

ON Friday evening Bartley Campbell's "Galley Slave" will be presented at the opera house, Adrian. On Saturday afternoon there will be a "Galley Slave" matinee, and on Saturday evening will be presented "Matrimony," the no less celebrated play by the same author. On each evening the Jackson train will be held until after the performance, and at the matinee performance a box of candy will be presented to each child in attendance.

WE wish our patrons, one and all, a Merry Christmas.

OFT repeated question: how much are your taxes this year?

MANY a young girl's life has been wrecked on the waves of her handkerchief.

HEN fruit is now selling at two cents per fruit. The hens are on a strike.

MRS. E. C. SMITH, of Toledo, made her friends in Tecumseh a short visit last week.

A PUBLIC examination of teachers for this township will be held on Monday, Dec. 27th.

THIS is the season of the year when the small boy is very anxious to go to Sunday school.

Joseph Cook says: "Set that man down as a fool who boasts that he does not read the local papers."

THE new planing mill of Merritt & Stretch will commence operations about the middle of January.

REV. S. CRANE, of Hillsdale, will preach at the Universalist church on Sunday next, morning and evening, in exchange with the pastor.

FOR the benefit of a large number of our young ladies we would say that there are only nine more days of 1880. A word to the wise is sufficient.

FIVE hundred and seventeen hogs were shipped from this station last Saturday. Kelly & Stevens sent off 265, and Hanford & Anthony shipped 252.

THE State Grange at Lansing was largely attended last week. Mr. W. H. Mather, of this village, who attended, reports a very successful session.

FULL many a rose is born to blush unseen, and waste its fragrance on the desert air; full many a nip is taken behind the screen, and cloves and coffee, too, are eaten there.

W. R. WOODEN has taken possession of his new office at the head of the stairs over the Postoffice. The rooms as they are now arranged make a very convenient and tasty law office indeed.

THE Michigan State Teachers' Association will meet at Lansing, Dec. 29th. Prof. C. B. Thomas is president of the association, and Prof. Z. C. Spencer is secretary—two former Tecumseh superintendents.

SOME medical man has asserted that when a person is full of whiskey he won't freeze. This theory seems to have a number of believers in this section, who were fixing themselves last Saturday night for an awful cold snap.

THOSE who wish to read the best Democratic paper in this country should send for the New York World. The weekly edition is an excellent political and family newspaper, and the subscription price is only one dollar per year.

WE understand that a large number of Tecumseh ladies intend to receive New Year's calls this year. All those who intend to receive are respectfully requested to leave their names at the HERALD office as early as convenient, as we shall keep a full list at our counting room for the convenience of callers.

Evening News: Dr. Loree, of Ridgeway, Lenawee county, besides practicing his profession, has devoted considerable time to swinology, has just sold 40 porkers, and has about as many more ready for hot water and a scraping iron. Pork and physic constitute what Greeley would call "diversified farming."

IN our account of the affair last week in which Geo. Adamson's wife was injured, we called the man's name George Buck. It should have been Frank Buck, of Franklin. George Buck, who lives here, takes exceptions to having his name used in vain in such a reckless manner. We make the correction freely and add that George is not that kind of a man.

BEWARE of the force of terrible cold days. We fear the report will soon reach us, that hundreds of bushels of potatoes have been frozen. Better draw a few loads of straw and put on those pits, and stop those cellar windows a little more thoroughly before it is too late. The frost is marching in deeper and deeper every day, and a little extra labor may save you some money.

Skating accidents have been common this year. The Monroe Democrat says: "Joe Willet went skating the other day. That is what's the matter with his eye." So we infer that Joe fell on his eye. It also says: "One of our society belles went skating the other day and knock[illegible] [illegible]e in the ice about the shape and size of the full moon." From which equally we infer that she—didn't fall on her eye.—Ypsilanti Sentinel.

THE papers are now publishing those solemn tables, the amount of taxes paid by the liquor venders of the State. We say solemn tables, because we never see one without reflecting that the greater part of these large sums comes, in the first instance from the poorest part of the community. It is in fact, the price of suffering and destitution. It is a tax on poverty and wretchedness.

A SHORT time since Frank Billington, of Franklin, visited the clothing store of George Heesen. He selected some clothing that he was in need of and asked Mr. Heesen to trust him for a short time, saying that he owned a farm in Franklin and would soon be able to pay for the garments. Mr. Heesen, thinking that the young man was honest in what he said, allowed him to take the goods. But Billington being repeatedly asked for the pay refused to give it. So Mr. Heesen upon enquiring found out that he did not possess any farm and that he had misrepresented things to obtain credit. And he then had a warrant issued for the arrest of Billington for obtaining goods upon false pretenses. Officer Merritt soon obtained the young man and brought him to Tecumseh, where he finally concluded to settle the matter by paying costs and the amount of the bill for goods.

Magazines Bound Cheap.

You can now get your Scribner's, Harper's, Popular Science, Peterson's and periodicals of that size, bound elegantly in ½ Roan for 75 cents, a volume, or in ½ Morocco for 90 cents a volume. Any size paper or magazine bound at low rates; also Picturesque Europe or America, Art Journal, &c., bound in full Morroco very cheap.—Leave orders with Dr. R. B. House, at his office.

THE GEORGE BANGS CASE.

THE suit of George F. Bangs vs. the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway company occupied the circuit court most of the time last week. Our readers will doubtless remember that this suit was commenced to recover damages for a serious injury which the plaintiff received in 1876. The case had been tried once, when a verdict was rendered in the plaintiff's favor for $4,000. The defendants carried it to the supreme court and obtained a new trial, and the second trial was held last week. The plaintiff obtained a verdict this time for $6,000, and would have got much more had it not been for one man on the jury. It seems hardly probable that the railway company will persist in carrying this case any further. Equity and justice are clearly in favor of the plaintiff's claim, and the only possible hope the defense can have is in some legal tecnicality. People here who know Geo. Bangs sympathize with him deeply in his misfortune and heartily congratulate him upon his deserved success.

A Wood Market Needed.

During the winter season when the farmers are not particularly busy with work upon their farms, a great many of them bring wood into the town and hitch their teams upon the main street. There are so many that on busy days the other teams together with the loads of wood block up the business portion of the street so that it is impossible for a person to drive his team through without waiting some ten or fifteen minutes for a way to be cleared. All this cannot be helped as long as every one that has any wood or produce to sell is required and expected to be upon Chicago street. But the common council could do away with all the trouble if they would designate some street, near the center of the town and intersecting Chicago street, as a wood market. Those who have wood to sell could then drive directly there and those wishing to buy would know exactly where to go in order to procure it. This would be an advantage to both buyer and seller, and much more, it would render Chicago street passable at all times of day.

THE COMING INAUGURATION.

Yesterday Col. Fitzsimmons received the following kind invitation, tendered to him and the other officers and men of the 1st Regiment M. S. T., to participate in the coming inauguration of General Garfield:

To COL. W. C. FITZSIMMONS, Tecumseh, Mich.

Some of the companies of the other regiments have signified their intention of attending and if any of the companies of the 1st regiment should decide to go they would undoubtedly be well received. The Colonel intends to be present and says he would be glad to be accompanied by some of his men.

DIED.

ROMYEN—In Tecumseh, Dec. 4th, Blandinah, wife of T. T. Romyen, aged 71 years and 4 months.

For many years a sufferer from paralysis, for the last year and a half wholly confined to the house, and almost blind, death came to her a sweet release from suffering. A friend who called to see her remarked to her daughter: "I suppose your mother is already to go?" She caught the words and replied: "Oh, yes; I am only waiting, and have been since last Saturday." The remains were taken to Lyons, N. Y., for burial, where they were met by old friends and neighbors, and tenderly laid to rest beside her darling boy, who died in childhood.

OSBORN—In Franklin, Dec. 6th, of congestion of the lungs, Aldina Grace, daughter of W. J. and M. E. Osborn, aged 4 years and 9 months.

Given Up by the Doctors.

Where doctors have failed to cure, and have given their patients up to die, Electric Bitters have often been used, and a cure effected, greatly to the astonishment of all. The Palace of Science in Education.

[illegible] we have been so long accustomed to apply the term to certain groups of concrete facts, that we forget that it may be applied, and, indeed, is now frequently applied, to any branch of knowledge investigated on the method which has been so fruitful in the study of physical phenomena. Science, indeed, is merely the counterpart of sentiment; each of them has its proper place, and each of them is indispensable to the complete development of the human mind. To exclude literature or the emotions on the other hand produce an imperfect, a lopsided, result; but there is no reason why either should be neglected. Let the programme of elementary education only be developed in the direction so long advocated by Sir John Labbock and those who think with him, and let the whole of the education of the country up to our colleges and universities be carried out on the same lines, and every side of the human constitution and every aspect of human learning will have fair play. Prof. Huxley did well to defend science as a method of mental discipline certainly equal to the old and merely literary methods which so long prevailed at our universities, and which have been so abused; but his address will be strangely misread if any idea of suppressing the old learning is attributed to him. It is interesting to notice that Sir Stafford Northcote, in his short address at Tiverton, followed the plan of that of Prof. Huxley, beginning by strenuously advocating the spread of scientific education in the country as the only means by which we can be able to cope with our neighbors, and concluding by maintaining that it would be a serious mistake to suppress literary training entirely.—Nature.

A NEW PAYING OCCUPATION FOR LA-

The handsome Nickel Plated New Home Lamp being introduced to the public this season, is the most meritorious article ever offered Agents to make money with, is safer, and more convenient than the Student Lamp, which has heretofore had the reputation of being the Safest Lamp made. It has a clamp to firmly attach it to the Sewing Machine, Piano, Organ, Desk, etc. The fear of the ordinary lamp being accidentally upset or thrown from the table, is entirely relieved by this simple contrivance. It can be adjusted to throw the light just where it is wanted to suit the eyes, and can be converted into a handsome wall lamp. It has the best argand burner, a filling indicator, and convenient match box, and its price is within the reach of everyone. It has been fully tested and editorially endorsed by the "Western Christian Advocate," "Am. Christian Review," "Herald and Presbyter," "Journal and Messenger," and "Christian Standard," the leading Religious papers of Cincinnati, and is endorsed by the Mayor and Post-Master of Cincinnati, the Agent of the American Express Companies, as being the Safest, Most Convenient and best Lamp made.

There are three reasons why Agents should seek such an article to canvass for—first for its absolute safety and great convenience, it is needed in every home—second its low price makes its sale immense—third it will be a credit to handle such an article. One southern Agent writes, it sells faster than Gen. Lee's portrait sold right after the war, another writes it beats the palmy days of the Sewing Machine, its rapid sale, low price, and liberal terms surprise old Agents.—Address Home Lamp Co., Cincinnati, O. Mentioning our paper and they will give you full particulars and exclusive territory to canvass in.

HOW CATTLE ARE SHIPPED TO ENGLAND.

There are several steamers, not belonging to any regular line, which are chartered as needed by commission merchants in this country to go to any part of Europe. These steamers average generally from 1,200 to 1,500 tons. One firm alone controls no less than thirty such unattached vessels. Besides, every passenger steamer for Liverpool, London and Glasgow carries a cargo of cattle, except on two lines. The cattle are shipped to Antwerp, Havre, Glasgow and Deptford, which is about fifteen miles from London. The vessels taking cattle to England also carry general cargoes, which they discharge on the continent after first landing their cattle. The reason for this is that there is a greater demand for small general cargoes on the continent than in England, and vessels are not allowed to carry over their net tonnage on account of the insurance.

Cattle are taken on and under deck in stalls measuring two feet eight inches on vessels sailing from New York, and two feet six inches on those from all other ports of the United States. These stalls are built under the supervision of an insurance inspector. The rate of freight this season has ranged from £4 15s. to £5 10s. a head, in advance. This rate includes covered room for necessary fodder, and passage to destination and back for one attendant for every thirty animals. During the summer shippers prefer to ship on deck, as the cattle get more air and come out fresher at the end of the voyage. On deck the steamers carry between 150 and 175 animals, the under deck about 225 head. Drinking water is condensed by steam process on board for their use, the ocean itself proving a never failing source of supply. The rates are exacted in advance, as cattle are not considered so safe a risk as wheat and other commodities. The cattle are generally put on the steamer in the stream, after it has left the dock, an old ferry boat usually being used for the purpose. They are shipped at points all along the river front, from Sixty-fifth street to Pier No. 1, and even down the bay, according to convenience. The number of cattle to be taken is regulated by the insurance inspectors, and cattle exporters must pay the entire freight, according to his report, even if they do not ship the entire number.

Sheep and pigs are stowed away in stalls on deck where there is not enough room for the cattle. Sometimes in the early spring, when the sea is liable to disturbances, some of the cattle get overboard, and then a very lively time ensues in getting them out. The cattle are hoisted on board usually and lowered, two at a time, by a winch into the hold. The allowance of water is from six to ten gallons a day to each bullock. The amount of fodder averages one ton to each animal. The rates of insurance apparently vary. Some shippers give it as from 3 per cent. in summer to 10 per cent. in winter. There is more risk to the cattle from perils of the sea in the latter season, as a heavy storm may make it necessary to lighten the ship by throwing the entire deck-load of cattle overboard. Shipments in winter are not very heavy, although last year a handsome profit was realized on a selected lot of fine cattle to supply the English with their Christmas roast beef. The New York shippers allow more space to the cattle than shippers at other ports. The carrying capacity of the vessels, of course, varies, but the average, as given by an old shipper, may be put safely at 200 head at a shipment, taking large and small vessels into account. On some of the large steamers the number has reached 500, and one Boston steamer has carried as many as 841 head. The largest shipment from New York by one steamer was 650 head.—Pittsburgh Stockman.

SMOKING ORCHARDS UNSUCCESSFUL.

A writer in the Rural World describes an unsuccessful attempt to keep off the curculio, by smoking his trees, fifty in number. A barrel of coal tar was bought, and several holes dug six inches deep through the orchard.—Corn cobs were dipped in the tar, placed in the holes, and set on fire. The operator says that he "got a nice smoke," and had his holes to suit the wind. The work was repeated three mornings in each week for a month. The whole process did no good, the young fruit being badly stung. As this remedy, comments Mr. J. J. Thomas, is frequently recommended by those who have given it little trial, such failures as this are worth recording. The jarring process, properly conducted, is easier, cheaper, and more efficient; if not properly applied, it is of little use.—Rural New Yorker.

Chas. L. Rossiter, 195 Summit St., Toledo, Ohio, says:—I would not take one thousand dollars for my Excelsior Kidney Pad, if I could not get another. I have gained in three months thirty pounds.—See Adv.

FARMERS' LIBRARIES.

The Indiana Farmer advises as follows: "The truly successful farmer needs to know far more than the average business man in other pursuits. The whole range of the sciences are in one way or another tributary to his business, and ought to be understood in a greater or less degree by all enterprising intelligent tillers of the soil. For example, the farmer needs to know something of geology and chemistry to understand the character and composition of soils, and the effects that the different kinds of manures and artificial fertilizers will produce upon them. He must know the principles of surveying that he may lay off his drains correctly, giving them such a pitch and direction as to carry off the surplus water neither too slowly nor too rapidly. He should know enough of botany to understand the growth of plants, and the kind of soil and treatment best suited to each.—The knowledge of the anatomy and physiology of animals is important to him, enabling him to breed his stock successfully, and to treat the diseased and maimed intelligently and safely. These and many other subjects are of the highest importance in his business and should be carefully and systematically studied. This topic is timely, now that the evenings have begun to lengthen and more time must be spent in doors. The farmer who reads and studies can make his evenings as profitable as the long days of summer, if he has the right kind of papers and books at command; and this suggests the value of farmers' libraries. Books, even in this day of rapid printing presses are somewhat expensive and the average farmer cannot own all that he ought to read, even of those pertaining to his own business, but if a neighbor would combine in the effort to have a circulating library, and thus divide the cost of purchasing books, the expense to each individual would be light. This plan is adopted in many places, and it would be well if it were much more general. The books might be kept under lock and key at the neighborhood postoffice, or store, and members of the library association should subscribe to such rules as would prevent the loss of books, and would secure the return of those taken out within a stipulated time. Let the plan be considered by all our readers who believe as we do, that farmers and their families should read more, and thus make the long evenings of winter more profitable and pleasant."

HOW SHEEP ARE FED IN ENGLAND.

Sheep in England are not given the run of the entire pasture as in America, but by the use of movable fences or hurdles, are given a bit of fresh ground daily, in addition to the run of a couple of days back. This necessitates the use of a good deal of fence, and some trouble, but English farmers seem to believe it pays. Care is taken that there is no waste in feeding: the crop in spring is generally winter rye, which is pauned off, or rye and vetches (a leguminous plant of the genus Vicia) mowed and fed from racks. Later on, spring grown crops are followed by a second crop of clover, and by the time this is exhausted, early sown white turnips are ready to feed, and a succession of these is kept up till Christmas and New Year's, when swedes are fed until May. Hay is always fed twice per day when turnips are given and is cut from a straw-thatched "rick" or stack in the field, but no more is ever fed than the sheep will consume at one time. The turnips are cut in slices before being put in the feeding racks, and some "extra nice" sheep owners order the roots washed before cutting. The sheep are thought to fatten much more rapidly because of the regularity with which they are fed and the variety of food which is furnished them. Oil-cake is frequently fed to the fattening sheep, and the whole system is thought a great improvement upon the method of soiling in barns.

Poor breeding is too often the "old way," where domestic fowls and chickens are left, comparatively, to forage for themselves at any season, when it is cold or hot, wet or dry, in storm or in calm, by day and by night. This plan of "roughing it," some persons contend, is a part of the most natural existence of fowls; for, "How do they live in a wild state?" ask the careless people, forgetting that in a domesticated condition the lives of the creatures are as different in all their surroundings as the two positions can possibly render them. Good breeding is, on the other hand, the "new way," where poultry is kept for pleasure and profit both, and where the keeper is willing to give a proper payment in return for what he receives from his properly tended and kindly treated stock.

An Iowa farmer says: "We raise 400 bushels of potatoes to the acre here, which would be a big thing if we didn't raise insects enough to eat 'em all up."

Several thousand deer carcasses have been shipped from Au Sable and Oscoda this fall.

HINTS ABOUT HORSES.

The horse's stomach has a capacity of only sixteen quarts, while that of an ox has two hundred and fifty. In the intestines this proportion is reversed, the horse having a capacity of one hundred and ninety quarts, against one hundred of the ox. The ox and most other animals have a gall bladder for the retention of a part of the bile secreted during digestion. The horse has none, and the bile flows directly into the intestines as fast as secreted. This construction of the digestive apparatus indicates that the horse was formed to eat slowly and digest continually bulky and innutritious food. When fed on hay, it passes very rapidly through the stomach into the intestines. The horse can eat but five pounds of hay in an hour, which is charged, during mastication, with four times its weight of saliva. Now, the stomach, to digest it well, will contain but ten quarts, and when the animal eats one-third of his daily ration, or seven pounds in one and a half hours, he has swallowed at least two stomachfuls of hay and saliva, one of these having passed to the intestine. Observation has showed that the food is passed to the intestine by the stomach in the order in which it is received. If we feed a horse with six quarts of oats, it will just fill his stomach, and if as soon as he finishes this we feed him the above ration of seven pounds of hay he will eat sufficient in three quarters of an hour to have forced the oats entirely out of his stomach into the intestine. As it is the office of the stomach to digest the nitrogenous parts of feed, and as a stomachful of oats contains four or five times as much of these as the same amount of hay, it is certain that either the stomach must secrete the gastric juice five times as fast, which is hardly possible, or it must retain this food five times as long. By feeding the oats first, it can only be retained long enough for the proper digestion of hay; consequently, it seems logical, when feeding a concentrated food like oats with a bulky one like hay, to feed the latter first, giving the grain the whole time between the repasts to be digested. The digestion of the horse is governed by the same laws as that of a man, and as we know that it is not best for a man to go at hard work the moment a hearty meal is eaten, so we should remember that a horse ought to have a little rest after his meal while the stomach is most active in the process of digestion.—American Cultivator.

HOW TO FEED BEES.

Experience in this as in other things is an advantage to the bee-keeper, enabling him to economize labor. At the same time the life of the bee family must not be sacrificed by a mistaken disposal of your time. To feed a large quantity, allowing much time to elapse between the feedings, is not good economy, as when this is done the bees store away the food that we give them, and it does not keep as well as honey, and must be fresh, therefore should be given to them daily. This should be done for the same reason that good farmers deal out their hay to their cattle, instead of giving the animals the privilege of going to the stack and helping themselves. The manner of serving the food to the bees is a subject of some importance. The honey board is usually used for the dining-table, and the provisions are sometimes placed in the cells of pieces of honey-comb, and the bees are giving access to this by leaving a small opening in the honey-board, which will allow them to enter in single file. Small dishes, like cup-plates, are sometimes used for holding the liquid. In this case, tiny sticks, or straw, should be dropped in to be used as floats by the bees.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Hudson Post: The death of the late Thomas H. Harris was a blow to the whole community. It is a long time since death has taken from this vicinity a man so universally beloved.

Adrian Times: G. W. Burdette, the veteran treasurer of Macon, was in the city to-day, making a settlement with the county treasurer. Mr. Burdette has made the pilgrimage for twenty-one consecutive years.

Hudson Gazette: The school board that so deceived, disappointed and damaged Miss Osborn, have now displaced her successor, and gone to the East side again for a teacher to take her room. This makes a vacancy over [illegible] to fill by re-employing Miss Osborn. Thus time often at least partly corrects the wrongs of this world.

Deerfield Record: James Kedzie met with a painful accident in Blinn & Weidmann's stave mill, last Saturday morning, which will lay him up for a short time. He was engaged in sawing heading bolts and reached down with his left hand to arrange the bolt in the carriage, when his mitten was caught in the saw teeth and his hand drawn upon the saw, which cut off the fore finger at the first joint and badly lacerated the ball of the thumb.

Hudson Post: As the funeral procession of Deacon Harris was approaching the railroad west of town last Sunday, the horse driven by Mr. Perrin Shepherdson took fright at a passing freight train and overturned the carriage, which contained Mr. Shepherdson and the Rev. G. P. Osborne. The horse was secured and the carriage righted up without any serious damage, excepting some bruises on Mr. Shepherdson's face.

Deerfield Record: Mr. Wm. Clark, residing about three and one-half miles north of this village, died very suddenly Thursday morning. He was hitching up his team preparatory to driving to Tecumseh, when he was taken with a severe pain in his heart and left side, and took his bed. Dr. Wood was immediately sent for and arrived just in time to witness his death. The doctor pronounced it a case of heart disease. Mr. Clark was a respected citizen and farmer, and well spoken of by his neighbors. His age was 68 years.

Adrian Press: A fire at Blissfield early Sunday morning, consumed a two-story and a one-story structure on the east side. The fire department was unable to control the blaze at the stage of its discovery. The small building was occupied by Jno. Rentz as a shoe shop, the contents of which are a loss without insurance. The two-story building was occupied by a branch of Japheth Cross' jewelry store, under the management of Capt. J. C. Cross, Japheth's brother, and the stock was insured. The buildings were owned by Mr. David Carpenter.

Blissfield Advance: About half-past eight o'clock Wednesday evening, the chimney flue of Williams' double store caught fire, and burning so intensely as to burst the covering off from the lower end, allowing a mass of burning soot to fall upon the basement floor. It was first discovered by Charley Howland, and with the assistance of a few citizens who happened to be in the store, the fire was put out before reaching the oil room, only ten feet distant, averting what might have been a serious conflagration.

Adrian Press: Mr. James W. Ash, of Raisin, is a man who can stand some annoyance, but his patience like other men's has a limit. A fellow named Ed. Shoemaker went by his house a few nights ago whooping and yelling and making himself generally noisy, finally firing a revolver. Ash, poking his head out to ascertain the cause heard a ball rattling against the house. He rushed after the shootist took away his weapon and afterward obtained a warrant for his arrest, but Shoemaker disappeared before service could be had.

Adrian Times: This morning a somewhat painful accident occurred to a workman at the car shops. M. R. Adams, from Carlton, Monroe county, who boards in the eastern part of the city, and another employe, were at work with a rip-saw, and the latter neglecting to remove a piece of timber which had been sawed, the piece was in some manner caught by the teeth of the saw and hurled with great force from the machine. The missile struck Adams on the chin, cutting an ugly gash two inches in length, and breaking and dislocating the left angle of the jaw. Dr. Rynd sewed up the wound and reduced the fracture.

In choosing from the numerous Christmas presents that will be acceptable in the joyous season fast approaching, please remember that none would be more gratifying to your friend and few would be more useful than a year's subscription to the HERALD. Each week its arrival with well filled columns would be a reminder of the good will of the giver, and would bring up pleasant memories of the delightful holiday season. Try it.

THE Leading American Newspaper.

The New York Tribune for 1881.

The Largest Circulation Among the Best People.

During the past year THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE received the largest circulation it ever attained, with the single exception of a short period in the first Lincoln campaign. It is a larger circulation, and more widely distributed over the whole country than any ever enjoyed by any other newspaper in the United States. This testimony is cited as the verdict of the American People on THE TRIBUNE'S political course, its editorials, its principles, and its merits as a newspaper.

For 1881 THE TRIBUNE will try to deserve equally well of the public. What and how much it did for the success of General Garfield it is content to let earnest Republicans see. It now hopes to give to his administration a discriminating support as effective as its efforts for his election.

Every citizen who helped to bring in this Administration should watch its course. The events to be recorded in THE TRIBUNE for 1881 will therefore have a peculiar interest. The year promises besides to show whether the South will still sacrifice everything to solidity, and whether the Democratic party, after twenty years of disloyalty and defeat, will dissolve or reform. Abroad it will show whether England can compose Ireland, whether the Republic in France, without the support of the leaders who established it, can stand alone; whether the Turk can longer pollute Europe. In Science it promises such practical triumphs as the use of electricity for gas, new modes of heating, and new forms of power in place of steam. In Literature and Art it offers the very flower of our nineteenth century development. In Religion, a concentration of force, and union of organizations on similar creeds and better work.

The well-known special features of THE TRIBUNE will be sedulously maintained. Its Agricultural Department will remain the fullest and best. The Household and the Young Folks' Departments, the literary, scientific and religious features, the standard market reports, will all be kept up, and, as opportunity offers, extended.

THE TRIBUNE PREMIUMS.

The Tribune has never been equalled in the substantial and permanent value of its premiums to agents and subscribers, and it adds to its list this year two of the most desirable it has ever offered. Note the following:

The Great Bible Concordance.

Analytical Concordance to the Bible, on an entirely new plan, containing every word in alphabetical order arranged under its Hebrew or Greek original, with the literal meaning of each and its pronunciation; exhibiting 311,000 references, 118,000 beyond Cruden; marking 30,000 various readings in the New Testament; with the latest information on Biblical Geography and Antiquities, etc., etc. By Robert Young, LL.D., author of a new Literal Translation of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures; Concise Critical Comments on the same; a Grammatical Analysis of the Minor Prophets in Hebrew; Biblical Notes and Queries; Hebrew Grammar, etc., etc.

This great work was originally published in England in October, 1879, and was sold at $15. We can now offer it in connection with The Tribune at the following remarkably low rates:

For $6 the Concordance and one copy of The Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year.

For $11 the Concordance and one copy of The Semi-Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year, or ten copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

For $20 the Concordance and twenty copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

The postage on the Concordance is 40 cents, which the subscriber will remit if wishing it sent by mail. Except for short distances the mail will be cheaper than the express.

Our second new premium for this year is the following:

THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE

Embracing Chambers's Encyclopædia complete, omitting only some of the cuts, with extensive additions by an able corps of American editors, treating about 15,000 additional topics, thoroughly Americanizing the entire book, adding to it over 25 per cent of the latest, freshest and most valuable matter, the whole making 15 Handsome Octavo Volumes of 8 by 9½ inches in size, printed in large type on good, strong, calendered paper, and neat and substantially bound in cloth.

We can offer this valuable work in connection with The Tribune as follows:

For $15 The Library of Universal Knowledge complete in 15 octavo volumes, substantially bound in cloth as above described, and The Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $20 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and The Semi-Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $19 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and ten copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

For $28 The Library of Universal Knowledge as above described, and twenty copies of The Weekly Tribune one year.

Five volumes of the work are now ready, the sixth is nearly through the press, and the rest will rapidly follow. It will be sent by mail or express at the subscriber's expense. The postage, if sent by mail, will be 21 cents per volume. In packages, by express, they can be had much cheaper.

PROMPT WORK.

To induce quick work for this great premium we make the following most extraordinary offer: With the first 2,000 orders received for The Library of Universal Knowledge we will send free, as a present from The Tribune, Macaulay's History of England in three handsome volumes, printed on large type and good paper, and neatly bound in cloth.

These books, like the others, will be sent at subscriber's expense by mail or express. The postage on the three volumes will be 21 cents.

Electric Light by Solar Heat.

An invention has just been patented which will prove of incalculable benefit to the Gulf States, for it puts into possession of every citizen ten negroes who will work, won't eat, don't want clothes or wages; and this concentrated ten negroes requires no skilled hand to work it. It will lift 114 cubic feet of water fifteen feet high every hour; it will drive a mill, a fan mill, a thrashing-machine, sugar-cane crushing rollers, a churn, a straw-cutter; it will clean rice, gin cotton, boil water, cook, distill water, turn an ice-cream freezer, make ice, distill ardent spirits, wash—in fine, be worth more than any ten negroes, or ten Chinese, or any ten Spaniards.

Do you remember that visitors to the great Exhibition of 1878 were astonished to see a pump lift water, steam potatoes, and boil soup, without coal or fire, only by sunbeams? Mons. Monchot's "Solar Receiver," which did all these wonders, has been so improved that it really seems to have become of practical use. Mons. Monchot's apparatus consisted of a brass shade, like a lamp shade, plated with silver, with its large opening turned toward the sun. In the center of the shade and in its axis was the receiver to be heated. This receiver was coated with black paint, or lamp-black (black is a great absorber of heat), and all around it was a glass screen to prevent the escape of the 'prisoned heat. Mons. Pifre has changed somewhat Mons. Monchot's apparatus. The latter gave the sides of his reflector an inclination of 45 deg. The former gives them something of the parabolic shape, makes the boiler less high by half, and so shuns all loss by radiation; he throws the sunbeams on the lower part of the boiler, which arrangement secures the regular production of steam; he changes the mechanism which keeps the apparatus constantly exposed to the sun; he has invented a new motive power and means of transmitting motion. To get up a machine of one-horse power requires a boiler which produces forty-two pounds of steam with a heat of five atmospheres; this quantity of steam can be raised with a reflector of twenty square yards—say fifteen yards eighteen inches diameter, at its greatest base.—Paris Correspondence New Orleans Picayune.

The Horrors of Chinese Warfare.

It is horrible to contemplate, says the British Medical Journal, that in the not improbable event of hostilities breaking out between Russia and China in Central Asia, large armies will be sent into the field by the latter power unaccompanied by medical officers, and unprovided with ambulances, bandages, or surgical appliances of any kind. The sick and wounded of these armies will have only comradeship to look to for succor; and when rapid advances or retreats are being effected, comradeship is, of course, of no avail, so that they will be left to perish miserably where they fall. It is almost incredible that an empire, boasting an ancient civilization and celestial culture, should be so careless of the lives of its defenders as to make not the faintest attempt to supply them with aid when struck down by the casualties of warfare; yet such is the case, and in previous campaigns in China the scenes witnessed on a field of battle for days after the conflict was over, when the wounded were slowly dying in protracted agonies, by the side of the dead, have been indescribably hideous and painful. This neglect of sick and wounded soldiers is a great blot on Chinese civilization.

A Heroine in a Fix.

I used to know the late G. P. R. James, whose novels at one time enjoyed a very large circulation. One day I called upon him, as we had agreed to go out somewhere together. I found him dolefully seated over a manuscript. He was not writing, but he was gazing at it with melancholy despair. I thought he was ill, and asked him whether this was the case. No, he said, he was physically well. What, then, was the matter with him? I anxiously inquired. "It is my heroine," he answered; "I have got her in such a fix that I can not extricate her without a slight violation of the rules of propriety." "Then let her be improper, and don't let us be late for the train," I flippantly said. "My dear friend," he replied, "do you want to ruin me? Are you not aware that I live by never allowing my heroines to do anything to which the most stringent mamma might object? If once the slightest doubt were raised about my novels being sound reading for the most innocent of school-room girls my occupation would be gone." And so we missed the train, but the heroine emerged from the pages of the novel a model of all that a heroine ought to do under difficult circumstances.—London Truth.

Fasting Horses.

To determine the capacity of horses to undergo the privations incident to a state of siege a series of experiments were made with these animals in Paris some years ago. The experiments proved (1) that a horse can hold out for twenty-five days without any nourishment, provided it is supplied with sufficient and good drinking water. 2. A horse can barely hold out for five days without water. 3. If a horse is well fed for ten days, but insufficiently provided with water throughout the same period, it will not outlive the eleventh day. One horse, from which water had been entirely withheld for three days, drank on the fourth day sixty liters of water within three minutes. A horse which received no solid nourishment for twelve days was nevertheless in a condition, on the twelfth day of its fast, to draw a load of 279 kilos.

Coral.

Coral is a marine production, of which there are several varieties. It was well known to the ancients, but it was reserved for the moderns to discover its real nature. It is, in fact, the nidus or nest of certain species of vermes. As an ornament black coral is most esteemed; but the red is also highly prized.

Coral is found in very great abundance in the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf, in the Mediterranean, on the coast of Sumatra, etc. It grows on rocks, and on any solid submarine body; and it is necessary to its production that it should remain fixed to its place. It has generally a shrub-like appearance. In the Straits of Messina, where a great deal is fished up, it usually grows to nearly a foot in length, and its thickness is about that of the little finger. It requires eight or ten years to arrive at its greatest size. The depth at which it is obtained is various—from ten to one hundred fathoms or more; but it seems to be necessary to its production that the rays of the sun should readily penetrate to the place of it habitation. Its value depends upon its size, solidity, and the depth and brilliancy of its color; and is so very various that, while some of the Sicilian coral sells for eight and ten guineas an ounce, other descriptions of it will not fetch one shilling a pound. The pale and fashionable pink hue, at present so much sought after, naturally realizes a very high price; in fact, the charge for the specimens is purely arbitrary. It is highly prized by opulent natives in India, as well as by the fair sex throughout Europe. The inferior or worm-eaten coral is used in some parts of the Madras coast, in the celebration of funeral rites. It is also used as a medicine.

The manner of fishing coral is nearly the same everywhere. That which is most commonly practiced in the Mediterranean is as follows: Seven or eight men go in a boat, commanded by the proprietor; the caster throws his net, if we may so call the machine which he uses to tear up the coral from the bottom of the sea; and the rest work the boat and help to draw in the net. This is composed of two beams of wood tied crosswise, with leads fixed to them to sink them. To these beams is fastened a quantity of hemp, twisted loosely round, and intermingled with some loose netting. In this condition the machine is let down into the sea; and when the coral is pretty strongly entwined in the hemp and nets, they draw it up with a rope, which they unwind according to the depth, and which it sometimes requires half a dozen boats to draw. If the rope happens to break, the fishermen run the hazard of being lost. Before the fishers go to sea they agree for the price of the coral; and the produce of the fishery is divided at the end of the season into thirteen parts, of which the proprietor has four, the caster two, and the other six men one each; the thirteenth belongs to the company in payment for boat-hire, etc.

Statistics of the Production of Beer.

Some official tables connected with the production of beer in all the European countries and the United States have been lately issued under authority of the Austrian Government. The following is a summary of the production during 1879: The whole German Empire produced 18,946,510 hectolitres, or 23,811,117 British barrels; Great Britain, 36,597,550 hectolitres, or 22,375,019 barrels; the United States of North America, 15,400,000 hectolitres, or 9,425,252 barrels; Austria-Hungary, 11,184,681 hectolitres, or 6,838,090 barrels; France, 8,721,000 hectolitres, or 5,331,845 barrels; Belgium, 7,854,000 hectolitres, or 4,801,778 barrels; Russia, 2,300,000 hectolitres, or 1,406,174 barrels; the Netherlands, 1,600,000 hectolitres, or 978,208 barrels; Denmark, 1,100,000 hectolitres, or 672,518 barrels; Sweden, 930,000 hectolitres, or 568,583 barrels; Italy, 870,000 hectolitres or 531,900 barrels; Switzerland, 724,000 hectolitres, or 448,753 barrels; Norway, 615,000 hectolitres, or 376,000 barrels. The greatest production in proportion to the population is in Belgium, where 167 litres, or a little over 34½ gallons per head, were manufactured; and the smallest production was in Russia, where the ratio was only three litres, or a little more than 5¼ pints for every inhabitant.

A Slanderer Punished.

A correspondent of the Lewiston (Idaho) Teller tells of two girls at Palouse bridge who found out that a fellow living half a mile distant had slandered them, so they went for him. As he appeared in sight one of the girls knocked him down with a stone, and before he had time to rise the other blackened his eyes with the club she brought with her. After giving him a thorough thrashing, they compelled him on his bended knees to promise that he would never insult a young lady again, which he did with a contrite and humble heart.

THERE is a married couple in Milan county, Texas, who have a strange mixture of names, and are now about to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. On the 16th of October, 1830, in Caldwell county, Ky., Drury Mitchuson Kevil married Lucretia Kevil Mitchuson, and she became Lucretia Kevil Mitchuson Kevil. They are not at all related. He was born in 1778, in Kentucky, and named for the father of his future wife, and she was born in South Carolina in 1810, and named for the mother of her future husband, and they have been mixed generally ever since.

THEY were walking by the seaside, and he sighed, and she sighed; and she was by his side, and he by her side, and they were both beside themselves, beside being at the seaside, where she sighed and he sighed.

A Story of a Screw.

A singular accident happened to a family named Hollsther, residing on Pearl street, near Market, a few days ago. The father died about a week ago, and was buried at Lone Mountain. On Saturday morning the mother visited the cemetery to decorate the grave with flowers. During her absence the children were at home under the care of a servant girl. A little boy 3 years of age, in playing about the room, got hold of a small brass screw which he pushed into his nostril. The girl in alarm tried to get it out, and in doing so pushed it further in. Then she ran and called some of the neighbors in, and they, in trying to get hold of it, pushed it out of sight. They continued their efforts until the screw-head was beyond reach. The mother was sent for, and after a night of alarm the child was taken to Dr. Laine, who, after trying to withdraw the screw with surgical instruments, put the little sufferer under the influence of anesthetics, and cut open the nose to prospect for the screw. He succeeded in disfiguring the child, probably for life, but failed in the object of his search, and the child was taken home to die, under the belief that the screw was [illegible] up into the brain. It lingered along for [illegible] days, when it died apparently only from the cutting of its face and nose, and on Tuesday morning passed the screw without distress, and then it occurred to those interested that the screw, instead of going up into the brain, had merely followed the air passage from the nose to the roof of the mouth, and had there been swallowed. Castor oil effected what the sealpel of the surgeon failed in, and the child is now recovering.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Sales of Public Lands.

Commissioner Williamson, of the General Land Office, has had prepared a statement showing the number of acres of public lands disposed of for cash and under the Homestead and Timber-Culture acts during the last ten fiscal years 1871 to 1880 inclusive. From this statement it appears that there was a falling off in the number of acres disposed of in all three classes of land from 1871 to 1875-76, and that since the latter year there has been a gradual increase in the number of acres disposed of. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1871, there were disposed of for cash 1,389,982 acres, and under the Homestead acts 4,600,326 acres. The sales gradually fell off each succeeding year until 1875, when but 2,356,057 acres were disposed of under the Homestead acts, and in 1876 only 640,691 acres were sold for cash.

Since that period there has been a gradual increase in sales and allotments, resulting in 1880 in the sale of 1,455,724 acres for cash, and the disposal of 6,070,507 acres under the Homestead acts. The Timber-Culture law was not enacted until 1873, and under it, in 1875, 464,870 acres were disposed of. Since 1875 the same noticeable increase observed in the sales for cash and allotments under the Homestead laws had occurred in the disposal of lands under the Timber-Culture act, so that in 1880 the allotments under this law aggregated 2,129,705 acres.

What Vanderbilt Might Do with His Money.

Some one has made a very curious calculation of what Mr. Vanderbilt could do with his money. William H. Vanderbilt's income from his investments in $51,000,000 4-per-cent. Government bonds is represented at $5,000 daily, which is $208.25 per hour, $3.47 per minute, or over 5 cents per second. Assuming that he is paid by the second, he cannot possibly spend his money, as he could not select his purchases and lay down the prices fast enough. He could not throw it away; to pick up, cast, recover, pick up and cast again would take him two seconds, and, if he worked all through the twenty-four hours without rest, he could not dispose of one-half his income. By living economically, saving up for four years, he could, placing his 5-cent pieces side by side, make a nickel belt around the earth; or by converting his savings into 1-cent pieces and mounting them in a pile, he would, in twenty years, erect a road to the moon and have $500 to invest when he got there. Should his amusement take a charitable twist, he could, out of a year's receipts, donate to every man, woman and child in the United States 20 cents and have money left over. Other vast possibilities occur to the glowing fancy of the calculator. In one day he could go to 8,000 different circuses, eat 10,000 pints of peanuts, drink 5,000 glasses of lemonade, and have money left to get his boots blacked. He can afford to have 500,000 shirts washed in one day, and on the day of his death his income will buy ten first-class funerals.—Ithaca Journal.

A Spider's Cradle.

A certain spider—found in the southern part of Europe—makes a curious cradle to preserve her babies through the cold winter, so that the spider family shall not be exterminated. She makes a silk case somewhat the shape of a balloon upside down, not quite half an inch long, and fitted with a door, or cover, which may be opened, though she leaves it carefully closed. In this are placed the eggs from which little spiders will come in the spring. To protect them from enemies and from cold the anxious mamma makes an outer case of exactly the same shape, only about an inch long, and of course larger all around, also fitted with a closed door. Between the two cases the space is stuffed with a golden-brown colored silk, which she spins herself, and makes it warm and comfortable inside. The whole thing is hung to a bush, and left throughout the winter.

Remarkable Discovery of a Murder.

The following account of a murder which was committed in Bermuda in the autumn of 1878 is by the Attorney-General of the islands, Mr. S. Brownlow Gray:

"In the autumn of 1878 a man committed a terrible crime in Somerset, which was for some time involved in deep mystery. His wife, a handsome and decent mulatto woman, disappeared suddenly and entirely from sight, after going home from church on Sunday, October 20. Suspicion immediately fell upon the husband, a clever young fellow of about thirty, but no trace of the missing woman was left behind, and there seemed a strong probability that the crime would remain undetected. On Sunday, however, October 27, a week after the woman had disappeared, some Somerville boatmen looking out toward the sea, as is their custom, were struck by observing in the Long Bay Channel, the surface of which was ruffled by a slight breeze, a long streak of calm, such as, to use their own illustration, a cask of oil usually diffuses around it when in the water. The feverish anxiety about the missing woman suggested some strange connection between this singular calm and the mode of her disappearance. I cannot tell you—her brother and three other men went out to the spot where it was observed, and from which it had not disappeared since Sunday, and with a series of fish hooks ranged along a long line dragged the bottom of the channel, but at first without success. Shifting the position of the boat, they dragged a little further to windward, and presently the line was caught. With water glasses the men discovered that they had caught it in a skeleton which was held down by some heavy weight. They pulled on the line; something suddenly gave way, and up came the skeleton of the trunk, pelvis, and legs of a human body, from which almost every vestige of flesh had disappeared, but which, from the minute fragments remaining, and the terrible stench, had evidently not lain long in the water. The husband was a fisherman, and Long Bay Channel was a favorite fishing ground, and he calculated, truly enough, that the fish would very soon destroy all means of identification; but it never entered into his head that as they did so their ravages, combined with the process of decomposition, would set free the matter which was to write the traces of his crime on the surface of the water. The case seems to be an exceedingly interesting one; the calm is not mentioned in any book on medical jurisprudence that I have, and the doctors seem not to have had experience of such an occurrence. A diver went down and found a stone with a rope attached, by which the body had been held down, and also portions of the scalp and of the skin of the sole of the foot, and of clothing, by means of which the body was identified. The husband was found guilty and executed."

Provoking Typographical Blunders.

There is no better field for an amusing article than the subject of typographical errors. Not long since one of the editors of the Republican wrote: "Secondly, to mollify the later Southern element, which could not stomach two loyal records on the ticket, and thirdly, the indispensableness of a barrel to meet the absolute necessity there was of carrying Indiana," and it came back to him in the following shape: "Secondly, to mollify the later Southern elements, which could not have stomached two legal swords on the ticket, and thirdly, the indispensableness of a tonsil to meet the absolute necessity there was of coughing medicine."

Recently in an editorial article the words "forlorn hope" were transformed into "falsome home." This is almost as ludicrous as "sympathizers of the people" appearing in proof as "syrup-eaters of the people," and "subserving" being set up as "scrub servelency," or "matins" in a church notice appearing as "matinees." In the advertisement of an Omaha educational institution the public for two or three days—until it was corrected—read that the school possessed an "able corpse of instructors." The other day, in chronicling a local event, the reporter wrote a sentence to the effect that "the thief jumped from his horse, and taking with him the bridle, threw it into a buggy," and it appeared in print next morning that the thief took the bridge and threw it into a buggy. We could go on and give a column of equally amusing and provoking errors, but the above are sufficient to demonstrate the fact that the lot of a newspaper writer is not always a happy one.

Printing offices, however, are not the only places where such blunders occur. For instance, a telegram was received at a certain town on the Missouri River for the clerk of a steamboat that was passing up stream. It was addressed to "Gillespie, clerk," and the messenger came down to the boat and inquired for "Giles, pie clerk."—Omaha Republican.

A Frog That Would a Ducking Go.

A Plainsville druggist has preserved in alcohol a huge bullfrog, and in his mouth a young duck. The history of the pair is as follows: Mr. Freeman, of Plainsville, had from time to time missed young duck, in all some twenty or twenty-five, for whose mysterious disappearance he was unable to account. Determined to fathom the mystery, he waited for the enemy, who surprised him in the shape of a large bullfrog as he seized one of the young ducks and was in the act of swallowing it, when Mr. Freeman put an end to the sport by rapping him over the head with a club. The two were preserved exactly as they were taken.—New Haven Palladium.

BROOKLYN.

Brooklyn is cutting its wisdom teeth and experiences now and then a twinge.

There are several changes in the business circles; an occasional dissolution of family partnership, and a bashfulness among applicants for clerkships; in the last named kind of workshops uncommon in this vicinsty.

Some who went to Dakota last spring have returned, and Townsend, though a much admirer of that land of wheat, has purchased a farm here.

Charles Powers, who emigrated to California many years ago visited us one day last week, and seems to have kept the memory of early friends unsullied through all the rough and tumble of mining camps, and San Francisco rogue catching. He joined the broken strands 'twixt then and now so easily that it was impossible to realize so long a time had intervened, and almost resuscitated a theory I once harbored on the sly, that some people never forget.

We failed to get our share of the great snow storm, so skating and fishing have become fashionable, Professor Pierce even angling in his cistern. His excuse was that his watch slipped from his pocket in there while drawing water. His scholars presented him a chain Thursday and he will hereafter cast his lines in the Vineyard.

The scholars of the Presbyterian Sabbath School made some very nice presents to their teachers. Mr. Geo. Green the Superintendent, received a seal ring; Mr. Palmer a chair, Mrs. Barnes a silver butter dish, and Florine Woodward pictures. It was a silver Christmas for nearly all over there. Across the way the school is much smaller, and gifts less pretentious. Reed, Foot and Fred Kline each got a doll baby, as big as a pin. There was no time to grow big ones.—These young gentlemen have been absent a year, and made their appearance at the last hour.

Mrs. Eichbaum received a nice cloak and the others "I wish you a Merry Christmas," same as

CLINTON.

Monday evening the 27th, the Masons had a supper at their hall.

Sunday afternoon J. C. Bontecou, of Jackson, gave us a rousing talk on temperance. He thoroughly ventilated the idea that saloonists should not be responsible for injury done to the public by their traffic.

The Baptists held a kind of Christmas exercise Sunday evening consisting of recitations, reading and singing by the choir, interspersed through the other exercises.

John Palmer bought and butchered a calf a few days over five months old, whose live weight was 710 pounds.—Quite much calf.

Oliver Allen found one of his horses down in the stable in such a manner that he could not get up, and in trying to extricate it he was struck by the struggling animal on his cheek and severely injured.

The Congregational Christmas tree put all their Sunday school pupils in fine spirits, and some older ones received nice presents.

Up at the Lancaster school house they had a Christmas tree, bountiously laden, a packed house, and a happy crowd. Several private Christmas trees and festivals were enjoyed in the vicinity.

Three cases of scarlet fever are reported in town. Two in the family of Mr. Parker and one in the Mathews' family.

Sylvester Green, while carrying a heavy stick to a circular saw, slipped and fell with two fingers between the stick and the ice, the ends were smashed off.

Marvin Cooley, coming to town on Monday evening to attend the Masonic supper, had a runaway, was thrown from the buggy and had a collar bone broken and otherwise badly bruised. The carriage was left half a mile west of town, badly broken; the team ran a mile and a half east of town, and was found in Charles Green's cornfield.

Mr. James Haliday, Sen., died Tuesday morning, aged nearly 82 yrs.

We have lost another school teacher. Monday evening at Chelsea, Mr. Frank Jenkins, of Bridgewater, and Miss Dellie Fife, teacher in our high school were married. So one by one our teachers are captured and carried off.

Mr. Crowel Eddy and wife returned Tuesday from a two week's visit in Milan, Ohio.

Dr. George Stephens' wife and child arrived Tuesday from Grand Island, Nebraska. This was the former home of Mr. S.

Mrs. Nimocks has returned from a two months' sojourn at Pike's Peak, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Canyon City, etc., bringing many stereoscopic views of the wildest scenery, specimens of silver ore, pottery by Santa Fee Indians, &c.

Ayres Bros. are buying considerable clover seed at present.

We learn that the Christmas tree and illumination at the Episcopal church Christmas eve. was largely attended and a fair display of presents.

Don't look any farther for that calf for John has found it embodied in the straw stack, having worked its way in between two stacks so far that it couldn't get out.

It is expected that a series of meetings will commence at the M. E. church next month conducted by the Rev. Mr. Higgins, of Detroit.

The social party given by the Springville band at Ayres Bros.' hall on Christmas eve was a grand success; 35 couples were present.

The first annual meeting of the sheep breeders and wool growers' association, for the election of officers, will be held at C. W. Greenleaf's on Friday evening, Dec. 31.

The railroad committee of Cambridge have securities for about five miles of right-a-way and $14.615 of local aid for the Toledo & Milwaukee R. R.

Lake mills is doing a fine business. Owing to the rush of custom work Mr. Mosher is obliged to hire extra help in the mill. C. D. Smith is the lucky one.

Married, at the residence of the bride's parents in Cambridge, Tuesday Dec. 21, John Waters, of Norvel and Miss Edith Bedell, of Cambridge.

RIDGEWAY.

Chas. C. Smith reports a ten pound boy at his house.

Smith McCarbery's present was a girl.

The children's supper at the M. E. church, on Christmas eve, passed off very pleasantly, and was hugely enjoyed by all in attendance.

The members of Rev. Swank's congregation called upon him rather unexpectedly last Thursday evening and presented the Rev. gentleman and his wife with an elegant set of dishes.

Inspired by the success of their last effort the committee announce another church social at Joe Osborn's on Friday night. This time the Gents will furnish the lunch packages, and the ladies will buy at auction.

C. L. Waring, of Holland, Mich., is spending a few days with his parents in this village.

And now will the Times' cor. please arise and explain who that young man is that's to bring a bonnie bride to Ridgeway.

Report says Minor Davidson met with a painful accident a day or two ago while driving home from Tecumseh. He was run over by a run-away team which came up behind. Mr. Davidson's buggy was wrecked and himself badly hurt.

Mr. Dud Macham and Miss Hattie Freer were married on Wednesday of last week at the residence of Jas. C. Freer; the Rev. G. H. Field officiating.

Wesley Lester and Miss Mary Thackray were united in matrimony on Friday of last week, May peice, joy and other blessings follow.

C. R. Wells has bought the blacksmith shop of Court Sneffer, and Mr. Mosher will excite his muscle at the forge therein.

With the mercury at 17° below, a good share of the house plants in Ridgeway took a bad cold on Tuesday night, and now we shall be excused from our nocturnal parade for the purpose of replenishing the fire. We smile when her back is turned.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Howe, of Burr Oak are the guests of Wm. H. Arner.

A Little Mixed.

The Detroit Evening News of last Tuesday has the following:

"Jacob Lang, of Macon, Lenawee county, aged 61 years, tells the following story: He says he arrived on a Central railroad train Christmas eve and put up at the Central hotel; got up a 7 o'clock Saturday, ate his breakfast, paid his bill and went out; returned at 10 o'clock, was drugged and remained in his room till 3 P.M., when he went to Swan's hotel, where he missed his pocket-book, containing $180; went back to the Central hotel and told the bar-tender, Patrick Mallory, of his loss; the latter said it was all right, that Lang had given it to him for safe keeping, and returned it with $37. Lang denies giving it to the bar-tender or anybody else, and says he must have lost it in the hotel where the cocktail mixer found it. Last evening Mallory was arrested on a capias, charged with robbing Lang, and is now in jail. Mallory says he can prove by two witnesses that Lang, while under the influence of liquor, gave him his pocket-book, and that it contained the precise sum which was afterwards returned to him."

LETTER FROM MARYLAND.

EASTON, MD., Dec. 22, 1880.

EDITOR HERALD:

After having visited the great manufacturing interests of Wilmington, Del., the building of the finest railroad cars, the construction of great iron ocean steamers, cotton, morocco, paper and powder factories, we took our departure for this point, and arrived here in the midst of a regular old-fashioned Michigan snow storm, an event that not only surprised us but also even the oldest inhabitant here; more snow having fallen here during the past forty-eight hours than has been known for many years. To-day, however, is bright and the white shroud of earth is fast fading before the warm rays of old Sol. The State of Maryland is geographically divided by the Chesapeake Bay into two unequal sections, known as the eastern and western. Embraces that part of the State lying east of the Chesapeake Bay. This county, Talbot, is located near the center of the eastern shore peninsula. It is bounded on the west by the Bay, on the south and east by the Great Choptank river and on the north by Queen Anne's county. The land is high, gently undulating and entirely free of marsh, stone, and sandbanks so common on the seaboard. This county possesses great water facilities, giving to the grain and fruit grower the double advantage of both water and railroad transportation to the great commercial markets of Baltimore, Wilmington, Philadelphia and New York. It is remarkable that almost every farm is situated directly on navigable salt water, and there is not a farm in the county beyond 4½ miles from navigation. The soil from all I can learn is fairly fertile, not so rich as Michigan, but when we consider its having been in cultivation nearly two hundred years, it produces as much as our land will by the time it reaches that age of cultivation. The sub-soil is red clay with sandy loam retentive of manure and easily cultivated. Marl of good quality is found in many localities, and I can see no reason why farming should not pay well, seeing that lands are now held at moderate figures, and the prices obtained for products are very remunerative. The season of the year prevents me from investigating the growth of crops and their mode and manner of farming. What I learn is "second-handed," so to speak. There are quite a number of northern farmers located near here and I am in hopes to interview them and obtain from them much information. Easton is the county town of this county, and is the largest town on the eastern shore of Maryland. It is located near the headwaters of Third Haven river, with steamboat landing three-quarters of a mile distant, and also within three miles of landing on Miles river. The Maryland and Delaware railroad passes through the place. It contains 6 churches, besides 2 colored churches, 2 banks, several good schools, 2 hotels, and the usual stores for a village of nearly 4,000 population. The people seem friendly and even anxious for northerners to come and settle in their midst. Good farming lands, improved, with reasonably good dwellings, can be purchased for from $25 to $45 per acre. It is a great country for fruit, such as peaches, strawberries, blackberries and raspberries, together with the pear, for which there is the best of market in the large cities within convenient reach. They tell me of raising 35 and 40 bushels of winter wheat per acre, and from 75 to 100 bushels of corn, but I rather think they have got it a little too high. We must take the statements of real estate agents and interested parties with some grains of allowance.

P. W. A.

NO LONGER will Brother Clough, of the Clinton News, tempt his subscribers to vie with each other in bringing to the office the largest ears of corn and the biggest pumpkins; no, for the old horse has passed to the great beyond. He died the death of a suicide, voluntarily jumping from a high bridge into the ravine below and breaking his neck. The deceased, with the exception of a few frivolities, especially the one that caused his death, was an exemplary beast, and he will be greatly missed by the subscribers in arrears.

WE understand that a few Tecumseh ladies intend keeping open house next Saturday, but they are somewhat tardy about leaving their names. Those who intend to receive are respectfully requested to leave their names at the HERALD office as early as convenient, as we shall keep a full list at our counting room for the convenience of callers.

The Earth's Population.

In the new issue of [illegible] Wagner's well-known "Bevolkerung der Erde" there are several points of fresh interest. Since the last issue, about two years ago, the population would seem to have been increased by about 17,000,000, the present population of the earth, according to Behm and Wagner, being 1,450,000,000, as against 1,439,000,000 two years ago. This, however, can not be set down to be absolute natural increase, much of the addition being, no doubt, the result of new and more accurate statistics. The new issue has, for example, to take account of several new census, some of them in countries where the population has not been accurately counted for many years, if at all. We have, for example, the census of Spain in 1877; Portugal, 1878; Greece, 1879; Bosnia and Herzegovina, 1879; New Zealand, 1878; Peru, 1876; Denmark, 1880, besides several smaller places. The total population is divided among the continents as follows: Europe, 315,929,000, or the ratio of 32.5 per square kilometre; Asia 834,707,000, or 18.7 per square kilometre; Africa, 205,679,000, or 6.9 per square kilometre; America, 95,495,500, or 2.5 per square kilometre; Australia and Polynesia, 4,031,000, or 0.4 per square kilometere; the remainder, 82,000, belong to the north polar region, mostly Iceland and Greenland. Although the census of the United States has been taken some months since, and a few of the data oozed out in an irregular fashion, Herren Böhm and Wagner have not made any statistics. They calculate that the census ought to give a result of at least 47,000,000. The editors have also made a fresh planimetrical calculation of the area of Africa, yielding a result of [illegible] forest and culture land, the same area savannahs and scattered woods, 1,500,000 bush, 4,200,000 steppe, and 10,500,000 desert. The last item seems appalling, but it should be remembered that much of this desert may be reclaimable, and that it includes large areas of fertile oases. A new planimetric calculation of the area of South America yields the result of 17,732,128 square kilometres, differing greatly from the sum of the official areas given by the South American governments.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Telegraphic Blunders.

A gentleman who had gone to the country to find a summer location for his family telegraphed to his wife. "Home to-night," and so the wife posted into the country at once, while the husband was making his way in a contrary direction.

Not long since a message came to the principal of a business house in this city from his traveling agent, who had reached Philadelphia—"Am at Continental Hotel. Send some hash by mail." The agent did not intend to reflect on the food at the hotel, but wanted "cash" sent by mail.

An affectionate uncle was informed by telegraph: "Mary is to be buried on Wednesday. Come sure." Mary, who lived in Chicago, was his favorite niece, and, as he had not heard of her illness, the sad intelligence gave him a severe shock. He dressed himself in deep mourning, and made a hurried journey to the west to find a jovial party assembled at Mary's wedding. The wires had arranged for her to be "buried" instead of "married."

Probably the worst blunder ever made was one that occurred in the case of a St. Louis merchant, who, while in New York, received a telegram informing him that his wife was ill. He sent a message to his family doctor, asking the nature of the sickness and if there was any danger, and received promptly the answer: "No danger. Your wife had a child. If we can keep her from having another to-night she will do well." The mystification of the agitated husband was not removed until a second inquiry revealed the fact that his indisposed lady had had a "chill."—From the Hour.

A Wonderful Blind Man.

A very remarkable blind man, named John Metcalf, a native of Manchester, was living at the beginning of this century; and, strange to say, his occupation was no other than that of a guide, his living being gained by his conducting strangers through intricate routes during the night or when the roads were covered with snow. Stranger still, however, was the calling which he subsequently followed, and this we are told was that of a "projector and surveyor of highways in difficult and mountainous parts.' With the aid solely of a staff which he carried, he was often to be seen traversing roads, mounting hills, and exploring valleys. It was under the direction of Metcalf that many of the roads over the Peak, in Derbyshire, were altered; and he also designed and superintended the construction of a new road in the same neighborhood, formed with a view to open a communication with the great London road without the necessity of passing over the mountains.

Ambiguities.

We may excuse the foreigner if, in speaking our language, he occasionally misapplies an ambiguous word, however oddly it may sound. Dr. Chalmers once entertained a distinguished guest from Switzerland, whom he asked if he would be helped to some "kippered salmon." The foreign divine asked the meaning of the uncouth word "kippered," and was told that it meant "preserved." Soon after the Switzer made use of this newly-acquired expression in a public prayer, when he offered a petition that a distinguished divine might long be "kippered to the Free Church of Scotland." Here is another example of a possible misconstruction of language: "I fear," said a country curate to his flock, "when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy was the love of our species, you must have understood me to say 'specie,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. You will prove, I hope, by your present contribution that you are no longer laboring under the same mistake."—Chambers' Journal.

A LITTLE Philadelphia boy who came in the house with both eyes in mourning and his nose bloody explained to his startled mother that he had been attending a pound party.

Edwin Booth's Malady.

[illegible] Mr. Matthew Marsh, of New York, writes to the Baltimore American, says: The last time Mr. Booth appeared in this city it was at the Madison Avenue Theater, for the benefit of the Poe Statue Fund. It was noticed then that he played Petruchio with more force, grace, and spontaneity than he had exhibited for years, and the fact was commented upon with pleasure and surprise. The truth is, Edwin Booth had been suffering for many years past the most severe mental depression, due to a physical ailment at once mysterious and nerve-destroying. It was what is sometimes called a "black tongue"—a malady which baffled all the physicians who first diagnosed his case. There was a pretty general agreement among the eminent doctors he consulted that the symptoms on his tongue betokened a cancerous ulceration. One told him he had cancer of the liver, another located it in the kidneys, and all agreed that his disease was mortal. Mr. Booth in his early life had been a pretty hard drinker, but since the death of his first wife, and partly, perhaps, because of his threatening disease, he has led an exceptionally temperate life. Being a man of morbid imagination, his tongue-trouble weighed upon his spirits and undoubtedly affected his study and interpretation of his favorite roles. He lost much of his fire and all of his spontaneity, and was supposed by the public—that knew nothing of his condition—to have long ago reached his culminative power, and to be gradually declining. But chance or Providence made him acquainted with a physician who makes a specialty of rare and mysterious disorders—those which baffle the skill of [illegible] studying the case, made up his mind that the disease was of parasitic origin, and that it was curable.

"It required six months of treatment to effect a cure, but it was finally pronounced complete, and the grateful actor made his physician a present of a $500 cup, and to the spoon added a $1,000 check. The cup is now on exhibition at Tiffany's, and is a beautiful specimen of the art of the silversmith. Mr. Booth went away in such excellent spirits at the thought that the cloud had been dissipated which had hung so long over his prospects, that he fully expected to do better work in England than ever before during his professional career. Dr. Durant is of the opinion that he could have cured Charlotte Cushman, or at least have greatly relieved her distressing symptoms. It will be remembered that that great artist died of cancer. One breast was removed twice and the other once during the continuance of her long and painful malady, but when urged near the close to seek such aid as could be afforded her, Charlotte Cushman, who had grown distrustful of the whole medical profession, replied, 'No, I prefer dying in peace to any of their medicaments.'

"Her experience was only that of the brilliant and witty 'Fanny Fern,' Mrs. James Parton, and also our own lamented Alice Cary. Both of these gifted women died of the same dreadful disease, after from twenty to thirty years of torture, and at least, in the case of Alice Cary, three frightful operations."

Died as a King Should.

J. E. Murdoch has written a book on the stage, in which occurs the following story:

Mr. Macready was fond of telling the following story as his experience of American independence, exemplified by a Western actor, of the self-satisfied kind. "In the last act of 'Hamlet,' said he, "I was very anxious to have the King, who was rather of a democratic turn of mind, to fall, when I stabbed him, over the steps of the throne and on the right-hand side, with his feet to the left, in order that when I was to fall I should have the center of the stage to myself, as befitting the principal personage of the tragedy. No objection was made to this request on the part of the actor, but [illegible] night, to my great surprise, he [illegible] directly round after receiving [illegible] breast, and deliberately fell in [illegible] of the scene, just on the spot [illegible] in the habit of dying. Well, as [illegible] man cannot move himself, and [illegible] was no time for others to do [illegible] King's body remained in possession [illegible] place, and I was forced to find another situation, which I did, and finished the scene in the best way I could.

"When I expostulated with his Majesty for the liberty he had taken, he coolly replied: 'Mr. Macready, we Western people know nothing about Kings excepting that they have an odd trick of doing as they please; therefore, I thought, as I was King, I had a right to do whatever I —— pleased; and so, sir, I fell back upon my kingly rights, from which, you perceive, sir, there is no appeal.' I retired," said Mr. Macready, "to my dressing-room to have a hearty laugh over what I felt more like crying over a moment before.

Love Stories, Old and New.

It was, we think, with "Jane Eyre" that it began to be supposed that the hot encounter of two lovers, with all their juxtapositions and all their quarrels, heats and coolnesses, was the only object of fiction—a disastrous discovery which has done more damage in the world than many a more important mistake. Taking Shakespeare's example, however, we may say that a story which is pure love and nothing else must end in a catastrophe. It is an intolerable state, not to be supported by the great mass of human beings who are not in love; and its suddenness and the overpowering brief current of its potency, the pity of the strange and tragic conclusion, the bitter-sweet of that union which is ending, are component parts of its power over us and justify its acceptance as the supreme romance, the one typical tale of youth and passion. There is no looking behind or after in sudden rapture—it is all concentrated in the moment, the hour, the one point of everlasting duration, which to ordinary mortals is beat out upon the clock in the shortest spell of time. But when the youthful pair occupy their real position in a real world the interest of their story not only gives zest to the study of more ordinary existence, but it gives the indispensable composition, the necessary beginning and ending which every tale requires.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Clothing in Relation to Health.

In the practical working out of [illegible] ideas on health, which seems to gain [illegible] favor with German scientists, Professor Jaeger, of Stuttgart, commends so-called normal clothing, which (1) consists exclusively of wool, and (2) is especially arranged to keep warm the middle line of the front of the body. The general object is to prevent accumulation of fat and water in the system, the author's leading principle being that the greater the specific gravity of the human body the more it is able to resist epidemic diseases. To the well-known properties of wool, as regards moisture and heat, Professor Jaeger makes a curious addition. He claims to prove that in our organism there are certain gaseous volatile substances—Dedlatgifte (odorous substances), which are continually being liberated in the acts of breathing and perspiring, and have important relations to mental states. Two distinct groups appear, those—viz., Lust and Unlust Stoffe (substances of pleasure and disliking); the former are exhaled during a joyful and pleasant state of mind, and produce this state with hightened vitality if inhaled. Of the latter, the reverse is true. It may be readily verified that during joy and happiness the odor of perspiration is not disagreeable, while during anguish and great nervous excitement it is offensive. The substances of disliking have, therefore, a bad odor, and in an atmosphere of them the vitality is lowered; hence, in a state of anguish and fear the body is more susceptible to contagious diseases. Now, Professor Jaeger contends that sheep's wool attracts the "substances of pleasure" (and this is distinct from its great odor-absorbing capacity in general), while clothing made of plant-fiber favors the accumulation of the offensive substances is adduced in support of these views. The experience of the many persons who may have adopted his normal clothing, both for summer and for winter, is stated to be very satisfactory.

Good Company, ($3 a year, Springfield, Mass.), number fifteen, has an account of a steamboat trip fo the head of navigation on the Missouri river by Mr. Herbert Hall Winslow, which happily combines information and incident, and is not wanting in graphic description of scenery and experience with Indians, etc., in that well-known region of our vast Northwest. One of the novel and characteristic occurrences on the trip was a free fight among some of the steamboat hands.

The First Sleeping Car.

A writer in the Davenport Democrat thus tells the story of the first sleeping car and its first public appearance: "I remember the date of its very first appearance—Sept. 16, 1856. I was on my way West, and had arrived at Toledo early in the evening, behind time, and had two hours to pass before the departure of the train for Chicago, in the waiting-room. I had noticed a rather queer-looking countryman, and, somewhat to my surprise, he accosted me with the inquiry:

"'Wouldn't you like to see something new?'

"Of course I would, and I accompanied him out the ugly the depot, among innumerable cars, one of which he opened; and, after lighting several lamps, invited me to enter. Well, it was something new—a large car fitted with a double tier of beds—bunks, more properly speaking. The man was Woodruff, the well-known sleeping-car patentee, and this was the first sleeping-car and its first appearance in public. Mr. Woodruff had, during several years past, been obliged to accompany his wife, a chronic invalid, from Ohio to Philadelphia, for medical treatment, and her sufferings on the journey had constantly suggested the possibility of a more comfortable conveyance, so that at last he conceived the idea of portable and adjustable berths; and, buying an old car, he worked out his idea and had, only an hour previous, brought it in for a trial trip which was to be made that same night."

The protection it affords by its timely use on Rheumatism, kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co's. and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Changes in English Fiction.

Marvelous changes both in the quality of English novels and in the personal of their writers have been witnessed since Dickens and Thackeray passed away; Shirley Brooks, George Lawrence and White Melville are no more. Anthony Trollope ambles along at the well-known pace on the same old nag. Charles Reade has laid aside the pen. Wilkie Collins grows increasing more spectral and shuddery, and less like his old master. George Eliot keeps for the most part silence, or, when she breaks it, does so only to bore a public which would fain admire. Miss Branddon, Mrs. Edwards and Mrs. Oliphant are still weaving the familiar plots out of the accustomed material. Miss Broughton has almost exhausted the resources of her prurient imagination. Ouida alone possesses that in full vigor.

Given Up by the Doctors.

Where doctors have failed to cure, and have given their patients up to die, Electric Bitters have often been used, and a cure effected, greatly to the astonishment of all. Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Urinary Organs are positively cured by Electric Bitters. They invariably cure Constipation, Headache and all Billous Attacks. Try them and be convinced that they are the best medicine ever used. Sold by C.A. Wright & Co. at fifty cents a bottle.

Appleton's Journal for January begins a new volume, and the publishers announce their intention of adhering to their purpose of providing intelligent readers with literature of a permanent and sterling character on all topics that effect public welfare and general culture. "Large space," they say, "will continue to be given to Literary and Art Themes, to Discussions of Social Questions, to Critical and Speculative Essays, to Papers, original and selected, that in any way are likely to interest intelligent people, or which will reflect the intellectual activity of the age." A feature will be brilliant novelettes from French, British, and home writers.

Important to Consumptives.

Rev. Dr. Cass, while a medical missionary to the East Indies, had placed in his hands the formula for a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affectations; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Complaints, Debility, etc. After having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, he feels it a duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The Recipe will be sent free of charge to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address, with stamp, (naming this paper,) Dr. M. E. Cass, 1257 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

John S. Newberry, of Detroit, is quite prominently mentioned as a candidate for Secretary of the Navy in Garfield's cabinet.

The withdrawal of Gov. Foster from the Senatorial race in Ohio simplifies the contest very much in that State. Secretary Sherman will now have a walk over.

The Cabinet gossips, at Washington, have their hands full just at present. The latest news is that Senator Blaine will take the portfolio of the State Department.

John Kelly is still at large and more violent than ever. He should try a box of Wheeler's Eureka Salve. If that fails to heal him up then he is past recovery.

Chauncey M. Depew says that some men are born great and some are born in Ohio; and he might have added that it is far better to be born in Ohio than to be born great.

If two Southern Congressmen had become embroiled in a disgraceful row like the recent set-to between Weaver and Sparks, the North would have been regaled with sundry learned and lengthy editorials about plantation manners.

The friends of Congressman Conger are warming up to their work in the Senatorial contest. They claim that Conger is the only stalwart in the State, who is fitted, by natural aptitude and political experience, to fill Zach Chandler's old shoes. And there is considerable truth in their claim too.

Are the friends of Judge Cooley doing anything to secure his appointment to the Supreme Bench, in the event of Justice Swayne's retirement? He would reflect honor not only upon his native State but upon the Supreme Bench as well. There is no abler constitutional lawyer or more eminent jurist in this country.

The Scientific American of December 25th contains a lengthy editorial notice of the late Prof. James C. Watsan. How true the saying is that a man is never appreciated in his own home until he dies or moves away.—Michigan people are now realizing the fact that the Board of Regents, in permitting themselves to be used as a tool to drive such men as Prof. Watson out of the University, committed one of those blunders which is worse than a crime.

The Chicago Times, on Christmas morning, printed seventy thousand quintuple sheets, using twelve and one-half tons of white paper and four hundred pounds of printers' ink.—Reckoned by the usual standard of computation there were, in this one edition of the Times, 1,280,000 ems, or about 3,200,000 types and spaces. If the 350,000 sheets, printed on both sides, were laid on the ground, they would make a strip twenty-five inches wide and more than two hundred miles in length.

Mr. Rufus Hatch the broker and millionaire of Wall street, is having a legal squabble with his carriage maker. The springs of a new carriage had to be repaired every few days for some months, and a bill of several hundred dollars was finally presented to Mr. Hatch therefor. Then Mr. Hatch got mad and refused to pay. The testimony came out on the trial that Mr. Hatch's coachman received a handsome gratuity from the carriage maker every year, and Hatch is innocent enough to suppose that there must be some connivance between his coachman and the carriage maker.

The official State canvass of the late election has been published. The following is the result on Governor:

David H. Jerome	178,944
F. M. Holloway	137,671
David Woodman, 2d	31,085
David Woodman	4,037
Isaac McKeever	1,114
Cornelius Quick	220
Total Rep. vote	178,944
Total Op. vote	174,127
Actual Rep. majority	4,817

These figures furnish a little food for reflection. They show that an active, determined, united opposition could easily undermine Republican supremacy right here in Michigan.

DEATH OF E. H. CHAPIN, D. D.

The Rev. Dr. Edwin H. Chapin, pastor of the Fourth Universalist church of New York city died on the evening of the 26th inst. He has been suffering from mental and physical debility for several months, and his friends have known for some time that there was no hope of his recovery, but the announcement of his death will nevertheless be received with much regret. Dr. Chapin has held a position for many years in the front rank of American pulpit orators. In fact for a period of twenty years and more he and Henry Ward Beecher were universally regarded as the two most eloquent divines in this country. During the last decade Dr. Chapin's health has been precarious, but he has still performed his pastoral duties, until within the past few months. He was a man of great simplicity of manners, and exalted personal character. He was the most talented and honored clergyman in the Universalist denomination, and his loss will be seriously felt in the ranks of liberal christianity.

Dr. Chapin was born in Union Village, Washington Co., N. Y., on the 29th of December, 1814. His parents were natives of New England, and while he was in his boyhood they removed to Bennington, Vt. He received his academic education at Bennington Seminary, and then returned to this State, beginning study for the bar in a lawyer's office in Troy. Without completing his legal studies he soon removed to Utica, where he became the assistant editor of the Magazine and Advocate, then the leading journal of the Universalist denomination. In 1837, when 13 years of age, he was ordained in Utica to the Universalist ministry. He immediately began preaching, and accepted a call to become the pastor of the Independent Christian Church, of Richmond, Va., a society composed of both Universalists and Unitarians. In 1840 he accepted the charge of the Universalist church in Charlestown, Mass. Six years later he accepted a call from the School Street Universalist Church, Boston, and became the colleague of Hosea Ballou. In 1848 Dr. Chapin came to this city to assume the pastorate of the Fourth Universalist Society, which he has ever since retained. Among his friends and parishoners was Horace Greely, whose funeral services took place in his church. Dr. Chapin leaves a wife, two sons and a daughter.

THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES.

The Times for 1881.

THE TIMES will enter the New Year with a larger circle of regular readers than it had at any previous period of its history, and the important events of the next year must steadily enlarge the field of independent journalism.

A new administration will be inaugurated; new political occasions will create new political duties; the great commercial and industrial prosperity of the country must stimulate progress and thrift in all sections, and the tendency of political power will be toward corruption and despotism, as it ever is when the people are diverted from the stern criticism of authority by peace and plenty.

THE TIMES will be in the future, as it has been in the past, absolutely independent of political parties, but earnestly and fearlessly devoted to integrity and patriotism in our statesmanship and to the freedom and sanctity of the ballot. Dependent party organs will continue to babble about party men and party measures; to excuse the public jobber and the demagogue; to suppress, pervert or deny the truth when party interests demand it, and to lavish the regulation praise of the servant to the master; but the growing intelligence of the age daily multiplies the readers of the independent newspapers, and the journals which best reflect the rapidly increasing independence of the people will be the great American journals of the future.

THE TIMES aims to reach the highest standard of the independent newspaper. It fearlessly opposes corruptionists and rings in all parties, whether in city, State or nation. It opposes every form of imperial political denominations, whether represented by an individual, by a faction or by a party. It opposes sectionalism North and South as the demon of the Republic, and it demands public tranquility and the supremacy of liberty and law for every citizen of the Union.

THE TIMES will begin the New Year strengthened in all its already exceptionally strong departments. Its Annals of the War will be continued in the WEEKLY EDITION, with specially interesting extracts therefrom in the other editions, and the contributors for 1881 to this important feature of the paper will be from the most distinguished soldiers and civilians of both North and South. Its large list of contributors in this and in foreign countries will be more than maintained; its reliable news correspondence is unsurpassed by that of any other journal of the country; its various departments essential to a complete newspaper for the home and family circle are constantly enlivened by fresh writers, and it will maintain the position it has won solely on its merits, as one of the most reliable and complete newspapers of the world.

TERMS: DAILY—delivered by carriers, for twelve cents a week; mail subscription, six dollars a year, or fifty cents a month, postage free. SUNDAY EDITION—Double sheet, two dollars a year, postage free; single copies, four cents. ANOTHER EVIL-DOER.

Last Friday night Deputy Sheriff Merritt lodged Thomas Nettleton in the lock-up to await being taken to the county jail. Nettleton was accused of infanticide at Milan, where he has been living for some time in the house of a widow. The Milan officers went after him but he eluded them and started out in the direction of Tecumseh. They were able to trace him as far as the woods situated about the county line, but there lost all trace of him. The fellow, as it was afterwards found, did not linger in the woods but came to Tecumseh, where officer Merritt being made known of his presence in town, went to look for him. He soon found the man in People's bank and arrested him before the Milan officers arrived. Nettleton is accused of a grave charge and if found guilty he should receive little mercy.

MERRITT & STRETCH.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITIES.

This year Saint Nicholas seemed to make his annual visit with renewed energy, and his sleigh-bells seemed to jingle much more merrily and his laugh was heartier than it has been for years. He must have been busily at work during the past year, for there seemed to be a gift for all in his beneficent load, and a gay day it was that he inaugurated for the little folks.

The day was observed by the churches generally.

Friday evening the Methodist society with the children of the Sabbath school assembled at the residence of George Brownell. Here a fine Christmas tree had been brought by Michael Smeltzer, and early in the evening it was bedecked with presents for the young people. After the distribution young and old seated themselves at the tables spread with Christmas dainties and partook of the board with joy and satisfaction.

The Baptist society congregated at their church, where the older people had decorated a tree with articles for the younger people. The tree was handsomely adorned, and it was amidst high glee and gayety that the tree was stripped of its embellishments.

The Universalist school decided to give a surprise to A. A. Kennedy, an officer of the school; so unknown to him they arranged their tree at his residence and assembled early on Christmas eve.—The surprised host received his guests in a manner which they had not counted on, as he gave them a surprise by appearing as Santa Claus. The tree was covered with presents for all, and before the exultations over and the gifts had ceased, the company was ushered to a Christmas supper. This added zest to the enjoyment and it was with gladsome hearts that the number sought their homes at a later hour.

The Episcopalians, according to their custom, held Christmas services at the church in the morning. The church was handsomely trimmed with evergreens and flowers and presented a cheering sight. Last Tuesday evening they had a festival at their parsonage, where the children were given a repast on Christmas sweet meats.

A MASTERPIECE.

It has been known for some years that George Martin has been, almost incessantly, at work upon a model of a first-class ship of war. This week he completed his work, and has at his work shop, built expressly for the purpose of constructing the ship, a model that has few equals in the perfectness of minute details and superior workmanship. Mr. Martin began to construct this model about ten years ago for amusement. During the time he has at a great expense collected a large number of volumes treating upon ship building, from which he has obtained the greater part of his information concerning his work.

The work is a model of a ship of war of ninety-eight guns and one pivot gun, and of the following proportions: length from taff-rail to knight-heads, 483 feet; extreme breadth of beam, 58½ feet; depth of hold, 32 feet; tons burden, 6,853; engines, 1,460 horse power.

The model is named the Dakota. She is ninety inches and 9-16ths long and fifteen inches wide. Copper fastened, with over sixteen thousand nails fastening on her copper. She has a fiddle-head and name-board on her bow, after the style of the American navy. She has five decks, and is full ship rigged. She has a complete system of flags, all properly adjusted, and has all her sails on; engine and screw in working order; ninety-eight brass cannon on broadside and one pivot gun in her bow. The cabin windows are in style of finish and number to correspond with the best vessels of her class. She has the full compliment of boats, eleven in number, to wit: 1 launch, 1 barge, 2 first cutters, 2 second cutters, 2 third cutters, 2 whale boats and a gig. She has her full number of anchors. Her bowsprit projects from her bow 38 inches; her fore-mast, from the deck to the truck, is 76½ inches; the main-mast is 88¾ inches; her mizzen-mast is 66½ inches. On her spar deck are the hatches, engine hatch, the bell upon which the hours and half hours are struck and other ship signals. The capstans, fife-rails, around the masts; pin-rails on the sides, steering wheel, binnicles, sky-lights, and the well for hoisting the screw out of the water. All the blocks are real, having wheels in them; most models having sham blocks. In short she is complete, having taken over eight years in building. An inspection of her will be the only means of determining the immense amount of work that has been put on the ship.

Mr. Martin deserves considerable credit for the masterly way in which he has carried out his intentions. The mere fact that there are between 500 and 600 pulleys no larger than a pea, cut out of a solid piece and each one being a perfect model in its shape and workings. Besides the great length of time that has been consumed in its construction, Mr. Martin has spent at least $500 for material. Wm. Gray, of this place, made the engine, and some Detroit parties the boiler, the two costing about one hundred dollars. The model is at least worth $1,500. No one can comprehend the labor upon such a piece of work without seeing it.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Last Saturday afternoon John R. Clark was conveyed to his home in a decidedly uncomfortable state. On the morning of the day before he arrived at Battle Creek from some place where he had been delivering a lecture, and jumped into an omnibus to be conveyed to another depot. He had scarcely got seated before the horses hitched to the bus took fright at the cars and started on a run. The driver was on the point of taking his seat, but the team jerked him down and threw him under the wheels, so that he lost his hold upon the reins. Mr. Clark seeing that the team was dashing along without a driver, concluded to jump out; as he did this he struck upon his head and shoulder. He was picked up in an insensible condition and taken to a hotel where he remained unconscious nearly through the entire day. He received a deep cut above his right eye, besides bruising several other parts of his body. Saturday he was considerably better, so that he took the cars for home; he is now much better and will be able to be out shortly. He was billed for a lecture at this place last Monday evening, but the accident prevented him from fulfilling his engagement.

DIED.

GLMSTEAD—Died at the family residence in Bay City, Mich., on the 21st inst., Cynthia Olmstead, aged 37 years.

The deceased was for many years a resident of Tecumseh. The remains were brought here for burial, the funeral services being held in St. Peter's church on the 24th inst. She leaves a husband and two children and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

BOYD—In Raisin, December 23, 1880, James Boyd, aged 69 years.

One by one the pioneers of Raisin are passing away, and but few are left of those who struck the first blows on the unbroken forest. The deceased was born in Antrim county, Ireland. He came to America with his parents in the year 1818, when he was seven years old, and settled in Groveland, Western New York, where he remained 15 years, when at the age of 22 years he came to Michigan and located on the farm where he spent the remainder of his days. Possessed of an indomitable energy and perseverance and a will that overcame all obstacles, he was well fitted for a pioneer, and the wilderness fast disappeared before him and in its stead came a productive and well cultivated farm. He was always ready to relieve those in want and many of the early settlers received from him timely assistance while struggling against the hardships of pioneer life, and not only did he relieve the temporal wants of those who came within his reach, but recognizing the importance of spiritual and intellectual improvement, the church and society in Raisin are much indebted for their prosperity to his liberality and patronage. Those knew him best who knew him at home, and it was under his own "vine and fig tree" that he exemplified true manhood and manifested those traits of character that endeared him to his family and to all whose privilege it was to share his hospitality. Strangely attached to his home and family he seldom left them except when business called him away, and by close attention to his chosen avocation his labors were crowned with success, demonstrating in his life the fact "That who true happiness would know,

Or who would fill a worthy part,
In any place, or high or low,
Must work with body, mind and heart."

On Christmas day a large concourse of friends and neighbors assembled at his residence, many of whom had deferred the festivities of the day that they might pay their last tribute of respect and esteem to their departed friend; and he was borne from the home he loved so well and in which during his last sickness, untiring effort had been made by a loying family to alleviate every pain and minister to every want, to his quiet resting place in Raisin cemetery.

FINCH—Thursday evening, Dec. 23, 1880, at the residence of his only son, Ornan B., Deacon John Finch, of this village, aged 71 years, 2 mos. and 22 days.

Funeral services at the Baptist church, the sermon being preached by his pastor, Rev. C. E. Conley, from the words: "Neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." (Rev. 21 : 4.) Deceased was born in the State of New Jersey. At the age of eight years he removed with his parents to Yates county, State of New York. Was married at the age of twenty-three to Miss Ann Garlinghouse, who survives him. The 48th anniversary of their marriage was just one week previous to the day of his death. In the spring of 1837, when he was 27 years of age, he made a public confession of faith in Christ, as his personal savior, and was baptised into the fellowship of the old Wayne church in the State of New York, of which church he remained a member for about 16 years. His early christian life was characterized by an earnest and almost constant study of God's word. In those days of early manhood the New Testament was almost invariably carried with him as he went forth to his day's toil. When he stopped for a few moments rest, its precious contents were perused. Whenever he found a passage, the meaning of which did not fully appear, it was marked, and at his earliest convenience its explanation was sought of some maturer christian. By this means he became not only familiar with the contents of the New Testament, but also became rooted and grounded in the faith. But few men, who do not make the study of God's word the work of their life, understand its vital doctrines better than did he. When he removed from the boundaries of the Wayne church he went to Avoca in the same county, where he remained until the spring of 1865, when he made Tecumseh his home. Here he has been a good citizen, a prosperous business man and an earnest christian. The interest of his church always lay near his heart. He was not only ready to support the cause with his means, but also by his presence at almost every meeting of his church, whether it were for social worship or for the more public declaration of the word. He has been a faithful and efficient office bearer, as Sunday school teacher, as trustee and as deacon. Two years ago the 17th day of last October, he was suddenly seized with a severe pain in his left foot. From that hour to the one of his death, that pain never left him. At times it was most excruciating. How intense it was, he used to say, no one but himself could know. Ministering love could at times assuage it, but never could destroy it. Before it almost peerless medical skill stood baffled. As a last resort amputation was decided upon, and the operation was performed on the 21st inst. by Prof. McLane of the State University. He lingered fifty-four hours and died. During all his sufferings he was never heard to utter a single reproachful word against God. Through it all a brave hope, such as an unwavering faith in the goodness of God alone could inspire, sustained him; and when the bridegroom came he was found watching, and his lamp was trimmed and burning.

Cadillac News: A brick yard with first-class machinery and good management is to be operated in this city next year.

Lady Alice, a trotting horse owned by L. A. Nichols, of Orangeville, and valued at $3,500 died of the epizoetic a few days ago.

Deputy Sheriff Dennis, of Bronson, who has held the office for over 20 years, has sold his property at that village and moved to Coldwater.

Just now the state press teems with accounts of the good roads in the interior. Pity it were not always so, or that our road laws did not aim to make them so.

Two men at Bronson make a business of hunting rabbits, and last week captured 330 of these long-eared 'small deer.' The men are assisted by five trained ferrets.

Greenville Bee: The lumbermen report various indications of an open winter. Spring birds are seen in the woods, and hibernating animals venture from their hiding places.

From as far north as East Saginaw to the southern tier of counties, almost every paper has an item to the effect that the roads are a little dusty, but that wheeling was never better.

Ionia National, December 24: Last week Ionia was suffering from an oil famine, and this week there is a short supply of coal. At noon yesterday dealers hadn't over five tons in stock.

Rochester Era: The aggressive and pugnacious little English sparrow has in some manner found its way to our village and taken possession as though its rights to do so were unquestioned.

There was a lottery drawing at Ionia one night last week, and there has since been heard a complaint that it was not square. Lotteries are illegal but the privilege of 'squealing' is as free as the air.

St. Louis Herald: The testing process which has been going on at the salt well in this village for some time past, shows conclusively that the brine obtained here is equal in strength to any in the State.

Kalkaska Leader: At Northport when they want to lift a chattel mortgage they set fire to the town hall, in which they are kept. Twice of late fire has been discovered in the cupboard where the mortgages are kept.

Daniel Green and William Ballens left the Arnold house, at Charlotte, under circumstances not satisfactory to the landlord, and went westward. An officer overtook them, and two board bills and $10 costs were quickly paid.

At Grand Rapids a few days ago two lads named Maurice Renihan and L. L. Hascall were coasting on Cherry street hill and they ran into a hack which contained a party of funeral mourners. Result, two boys almost ready for other funerals.

The Red Ribbon central committee, legislative temperance society and State Woman's Christian Temperance Union have opened rooms in Lansing for the use of members of the legislature and visitors from the State at large. These rooms will be kept open during the session.

Mr. Adolph Eisen, of Coldwater, probably has the finest collection of butterflies and insects in the State. He is perfectly wrapped up in them and his collection embraces many specimens from remote parts of the globe, which are valuable and difficult to obtain.

The Rev. Edward Foster, pastor of the M. E. church at Freeland, Saginaw county, dropped dead on the steps in front of a drug store at that place, Tuesday evening. He was around town all the afternoon apparently in good health. Heart disease is the supposed cause of his death.

Greenville Bee, December 23: This morning the village of Belding was startled by the discovery that during the night the safe in the railroad depot had been blown open and robbed of its contents—about $300. Of three men who are suspected of the burglary one has been arrested.

Dr. George Ferguson, of Coldwater, is the most indefatigable temperance worker in the entire community. He is a physician with an extensive practice, but he devotes his entire evenings to agitating the subject about the county, holding meetings in the school houses, and always meets with success.

Bay City Tribune: H. P. Warfield, of the Peninsular rifle team, who had the index finger of his left hand nearly severed from the hand while splitting kindling some months ago, intends having it amputated soon. This will not, it is hoped, deprive him of the accurateness he has in handling the rifle.

Jackson Patriot: The Walker coal mine, two miles south of this city, has been abandoned, and is rapidly filling with water. While the mine was being operated the wells in the vicinity were drained into it and became dry, but now that the shaft is filling up, water is once more appearing in them, much to the satisfaction of the families in the vicinity.

The Williamston Enterprise says:—"Rev. C. B. Ludwig, ex-pastor of the congregational church, on leaving for his new field of labor in Clare county last week, quietly and unknown to the society removed the organ, taking it with him, on the strength of the fact, we understand, of his having $1.80 in the organ fund. No steps have been taken toward recovering the instrument as yet."

There is a Ridgeway in Lenawee county, and the Grand Trunk railroad company persists in calling the station at Richmond, Macomb county, "Ridgeway station." This makes confusion, loss, delay, and all manner of vexation in the transmission of mail matter, freight, etc., and there is an earnest desire expressed to have the latter place's named changed to what it should be, viz: "Richmond."

The annual meeting of the Washtenaw County Agricultural and Horticultural Society was held at Ann Arbor, December 21. The old officers all declined re-election. The following were elected for ensuing year:

President—E. T. Walker, Salem.
Vice-Presidents—J. W. Wing, Scio; J. D. Baldwin, Ann Arbor; David Cody Pittsfield; W. B. Thompson, Salem; Marcus S. Cook, Lima.
Rec. Secretary—John N. Bailey, Ann Arbor.
Cor. Secretary—D. M. Finley, Ann Arbor.
Treasurer—Dr. W. B. Smith, Ann Arbor.

A vote of thanks was unanimously adopted in recognition of the faithfulness and ability with which the retiring President, Secretary and Treasurer had discharged their duties during the past year.

An old man named Starkweather, who has been an inmate of the County Insane Asylum, at Wayne, for many years past, was found on Monday by the officials of that institution lying on a bed in his room bleeding profusely from a wound in his neck. An investigation showed that he had cut his throat with a dull jack knife which he had in his possession, and had made a horrible job of it. Dr. Collar, the physician of the institution, stopped the loss of blood and sewed the wound. The injury is, however, of such a nature that it is impossible for Starkweather to live, and at the last accounts he was slowly sinking. He was sent to the asylum from Plymouth, and has always been of a very quiet disposition. He spent most of his time in utilizing the billiard table, which is a source of amusement for the male inmates.

ANN ARBOR, December 23.—The twenty-third annual meeting of the New England Society was held on Wednesday evening at Armory Hall. The attendance was not quite as large as usual, there being only about sixty or seventy persons. The business meeting was held at 7 o'clock, when the following officers were elected:

President—Prof. C. K. Adams.
Vice-President—Theodore Taylor.
Rec. Secretary—Alex. W. Hamilton.
Cor. Secretary—Prof. C. E. Greene.
Treasurer—A. L. Noble.
Ex. Committee—Dr. E. S. Dunster, Prof. E. Olney, P. L. Page and E. J. Knowlton.

The exercises of the evening were then begun. Music was furnished by a double quartette under the direction of Mr. Alvin Wilsey. After prayer by Rev. Dr. Steele the annual address was delivered by Rev. John Alabaster, his subject being "William Cullen Bryant."

After the address was concluded, the society and its guests adjourned to the large hall above, where an elegant supper had been provided. The tables, which were handsomely decorated, were set for about 200 guests, but there were not quite that many present. After supper toasts and responses were given, Prof. Pettee, the President of the society, presiding as toastmaster, and the responses being occasionally interspersed with music.

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find

I. All the world's news, so presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which degrades instead of elevates, which stimulates low passions instead of ennobling the intellect, which pampers idle curiosity instead of satisfying rational desires, THE SUN does not print. Its aim is to be the best newspaper for the family and the fireside, because it is the purest and most trustworthy. Its stories are those from which the world may learn how to live, what to avoid, what to shun, what to seek, what to love, what to hate, what to pursue, what to spurn, what to admire, what to ridicule, what to imitate, what to reject, what to believe, what to doubt, what to hope, what to fear, what to defend.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN's habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to recommend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep. Its notion of duty is to resist to its utmost power the efforts of men in the Republican party to set up another form of government in place of that which exists. The year 1881 and the years immediately following will probably decide this supremely important contest. THE SUN believes that the victory will be with the people as against the Rings for monopoly, the Rings for plunder, and the Rings for imperial power.

Our terms are as follows:

MASTER J. J. WOODMAN'S ADDRESS BEFORE THE STATE GRANGE.

Members of the Michigan State Grange and Patrons of Michigan:

"Time flies." The years come and go, and leave their impress on our brows in deeper wrinkles and more silvery locks. But eight short years have passed since our order came into life in this State, yet, by our care and guidance, it has surmounted every difficulty, grown up to full manhood, and taken its place among the permanent institutions of the State. Again we meet to look over the past, and prepare for its future work and greater achievements.

This State Grange was organized April 15, 1873, with twenty Subordinate Granges, and a membership of less than 500, and at the time of the first annual meeting, held in the village of Kalamazoo, in January, 1874, there were 216 Granges, with a membership estimated at 10 000. At the second annual meeting, held in the city of Grand Rapids, in January, 1875, the records showed that 564 Granges had been organized, making an increase of 348 during the year. In his communication to the State Grange at that session, Worthy Master S. F. Brown said: "In the old and densely settled parts of the State, little remains to be done; while in the new and sparsely populated regions there is work for the organizing Deputy. * * * Within the past year, I have received many letters from members of the Order, in which the writers complain of irregularities and improprieties in their respective Granges. * * * One cause of the want of success and harmony in some of the Granges, comes from the fact that sufficient caution and care were not exercised in the admission of the first membership. In some cases persons have been admitted to our Order as charter members who had no sympathies or interests in harmony with its purposes, and who sought admission within the gates from selfish and sinister motives, and for purposes of personal aggrandizement."

"There was another class of persons who come into the Grange, who were real farmers, who imagined that to realize great pecuniary advantage it would only be necessary to take the obligation of a Patron, and receive the degrees.

"There is another class, comprising a great majority of the members of the Order, who, feeling the absolute necessity of organization and co-operation on the part of the farmers, and profoundly appreciating the true spirit and objects of the Order, have come into it with pure hearts and an earnest purpose to work out the momentous problems of the hour." * * *

I have urged with earnestness that Patrons should make themselves thoroughly acquainted with business, the laws of trade, and the financial operations of the speculative world; and as far as practicable co-operate for their mutual advantage, and protection from the wily tricks of traveling agents and imposters; to cultivate friendly relations with all honorable business men; to encourage home production and home manufactures; to "bring producers and consumers, farmers and manufacturers into the most direct and friendly relations possible;" to systematize all of the operations of the farm, and do business in a business way, discountenancing "the credit system, the mortgage system, the fashion system, and every other system that leads to prodigality and bankruptcy." * * * *

STATE LEGISLATURE.

The last Legislature of our State was memorialized by the State Grange, and petitioned by Subordinate Granges for certain reforms in the State laws, which without question, the interests of the State and the people demanded; but which did not meet with favor, by a majority of the members of that body. Two years have passed, the records of legislators scanned, and either endorsed or condemned, and another election of representatives takes place. It seems but proper that we should renew our requests, and show by our faith and our acts that we are in earnest in our demands, and that the word "fail" in a laudable undertaking is not yet to be written upon our banner.

I am of the opinion that the Order in this State has sufficient influence, if properly directed, to secure wholesome reforms in legislation. Legislators are but servants of the people, exercising only delegated power, and responsible to the people for every act. As a rule they are high minded, honorable men, representing every interest, ambitious to so legislate as to promote the general welfare, and will obey the wishes of their constituents if made known to them.

Two years ago we declared that the law allowing ten per cent. interest on money, under special contract should be repealed, and a penalty inflicted for exacting or taking more than legal interest, and that the attorney fee, and cost of foreclosing mortgages on real estate, be limited within the bounds of equity and reason, so as to give the unfortunate mortgagor some chance to save a small pittance, at least, of the hard earnings of a lifetime, from the avariciousness of men.

TAXATION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

The fact that real estate bears an undue burden of taxation, while a very large portion of the personal property of the State pays no taxes whatever, was sufficient reason for asking the last Legislature to provide for a more just and equal assessment and taxation of all classes of personal property, including money and securities. As no definite action was taken to remedy the evil, the burden still exists, and the same reasons for renewing the demand. Should it not be done?

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

This is our institution, established to meet the requirements of a progressive agriculture. The State Grange, as well as many of the Subordinate Granges, have taken deep interest in it from the first. We found it giving to its students, in a fuller and more systematic way, that education which it is part of the work of the Grange to make general among all its members. Some worthy members of our Order have even ventured the opinion that the influence of the College upon education is limited, compared with the Grange, without reflecting that the College is for the young, and gives them a thorough literary course of training, in which science is applied direct to practical agriculture. In addition to all this, experiments are made, new problems solved, hidden truths brought to light, and much other valuable and necessary work is being done, which no farmer, however intelligent, or organization of farmers, can do. Such is the diffusive nature of education, and such is its increased power when it is systematic, thorough and comprehensive, that it is difficult to make comparisons. Both means of education are needed, and they serve to aid and supplement each other. Many graduates and students of the College are active members of our organization in this State, thus being doubly educated to love the farm, and the independent and honorable calling of the farmer.

It is most gratifying to know that at least one half the graduates of the College engage in farming as their chosen avocation, and those that go into other employments than agriculture carry with them a familiarity and sympathy with farming interests which they would not have had under a different system of education. The general spirit which controls the whole educational system of colleges and universities in this country is literary and professional, rather than practical. It assumes that the students are to be physicians, lawyers, editors, teachers, clergymen, etc.; and as these professions are overcrowded, and but few of the graduates succeed in them, when the struggle with an active business life begins, the want of a more practical education is keenly felt. Our Agricultural College is intended to supply this long felt want, and to qualify its graduates for the industrial pursuits, as well as the professional. Valuable improvements are being made upon the farm, the stock, and the orchards. The botanical and horticultural department has been put in possession of a hall for its especial use. The number of students has largely increased; and the farmers' institutes, held under the auspices of the College, are highly appreciated by the farmers of the State, and are doing much to make the institution more widely and better known. The College is indeed having a healthy and steady growth, and is well worthy the support we give it.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

A very important and interesting session of the National Grange was recently held in the city of Washington, the birthplace of our Order, and the home of most of its founders. The delegates from thirty-one States—more than was ever represented at any former session at that body—and a large number of visiting members were most cordially and appropriately welcomed by the founders of the Order. The able and interesting address of welcome by Bro. Saunders, the first Master of the National Grange, as well as the cheering and happy response of Bro. Darden, and the remarks of Bro. J. R. Thompson in behalf of the founders will be read with deep interest by Patrons everywhere.

The following resolutions contain a summary of the final action of the National Grange upon the several questions therein named:

"Resolved, That the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry most respectfully, yet earnestly request of Congress—

"1st, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be made the Secretary of Agriculture, and a member of the President's cabinet, with the same salary as Secretaries of other departments, and that this department be sustained and encouraged by appropriations commensurate with its importance.

"2d. The enactment of a general railroad law, prohibiting all discrimination in favor of or against any class, locality, or interest in the transportation of passengers or freight; also prohibiting excessive or exorbitant rates.

"3d. Such revision of the patent laws as shall effectually protect the innocent purchaser or user of a patented article or implement, and make the manufacturer or vendor alone responsible for violation of law.

"4th. The immediate enactment of a graduated income tax, to the end that all wealth may bear its just and equal proportion of the expenses of government, and that productive industry be so far relieved from the burdens of taxation as shall be consistent with strict justice to all.

"Resolved, That we will hold each Senator and Representative in Congress responsible for his action upon the subject matter therein set forth, and we pledge ourselves most cordially; and earnestly invite every Patron and every farmer in all our country to unite with us, to use our whole influence, both by word and ballot, wholly regardless of party ties, political associations, or personal connections, to carry out the spirit of the foregoing resolutions."

I recommend that every Subordinate Grange in the State hold open meeting for the discussion of all questions of State or National policy on which legislation is asked by either the State or National Grange; and to appoint active canvassers, to circulate the several petitions for endorsers, through the entire jurisdiction of the Grange.

CONCLUSION.

With this session my third term of office expires, and as I have heretofore intimated, cannot be a candidate for re-election. For six years I have devoted most of my time and energies to the work of the Order, and with what results others must judge. I have endeavored to do my whole duty faithfully and impartially, and have the satisfaction of knowing that I am not turning over to my successor a dead, dying or bankrupt institution. I believe the Order in this State to be in a healthy and prosperous condition, and its future full of encouragement.

In closing my official labors as Master of the State Grange, it seems but proper that I should give a summary of some of the results of our efforts as an organization.

When we organized, many of our members were isolated, and unsocial, each striving for himself against the superior shrewdness, tact and deceptions of those who live and grow rich upon the labor of others. That isolation has been to a great extent broken up, and the families of farmers know and visit each other, and meet in social recreation and mutual improvement in the family circles. The Subordinate Granges and socials, grove meetings and neighborhood pic-nics, the "Harvest Feasts," the County Grange, County pic-nics and mass meetings; and in the State Grange, and annual State reunions. All are members of one great brotherhood, bound together by ties of fraternity.—All are seeking each other's interests, all inspired by the same motives, striving for the same objects and reaping the same benefits.

Although the financial benefits accruing to farmers from the Grange are among the least in importance, yet they should not be overlooked.

We found that land plaster was being sold for $4,00 per ton at the mills, and a combination of all the manufacturers and dealers prevented any reduction in price, or arrangement by which farmers living at a distance from the mills could deal directly with the manufacturers, and thereby save the commission of agents. This state of affairs resulted in the building of the Grange Plaster Mill, now owned and operated by Bros. Day & Taylor. As the combination was organized for a period of five years, it is fair to assume that the price of plaster would have been kept at the combination price—$4.00 per ton—up to this time, had not the Grange mill have been built.

In 1872, and before the organization of the farmers in this State, Congress reduced the tariff on wool, which so encouraged the importation of foreign wools that the price went down from 60 to 25 cents per pound. By the united action of the Order in this, and other wool growing States, Congress was induced to restore the tariff in 1874, and the same influence has, without doubt, on two occasions prevented the passage of a bill for its subsequent reduction. Hence, all that farmers have realized above twenty-five cents a pound for their wool since the restoration of the tariff, can be set to the credit of our organization.

The numerous Grange co-operative, stores located in different portions of the State, some of which are doing a retail business of nearly $100,000 annually, are saving largely to those who patronize them. Add to all these the increased knowledge of business which farmers have acquired through the influence of the Grange,—enabling them to buy and sell more judiciously, and the employment of bonded agents to sell farm produce and fill orders for Patrons; and some idea can be formed of the financial work and benefits resulting from our organization.

Who can look over our beautiful State and witness the improvements upon the farms, improved system of farming, increased productiveness of the soil, and beautiful homes, which have been made within the last few years through the direct influence of the Grange, and say that it is an organization of no value to the farmers? Who can witness the change which has taken place in the social and business habits of farmers, their increasing want of agricultural papers, and their growing inclination to read, think, understand and act for themselves in all business transactions, and not admit that the Grange is doing a noble work?

The Grange has accomplished much in systematizing the labor of the farm and the household, thereby lightening the burden of labor, and making the daily duties of life something more than a routine. It is also cultivating a love for the beautiful, a desire for knowledge and increasing the educational advantages for farmers' children. By respecting themselves, farmers are being respected, and the influence of our Order upon the politics of the country, is bringing farmers to the front, for positions of honor and trust. The work goes bravely on, but our ranks are not as full as they should be. Every person of good moral character, of suitable age, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits, should belong to the Grange. Then indeed would our Order have a power for good which would not only be acknowledged but felt.

For what has been accomplished, I claim but little of the honors to myself. I have been but your servant, executing the laws which you have made, and performing the duties which you have placed upon me. In my labors I have been constantly and faithfully aided by the wise counsel, and self-sacrificing devotion to the Order, of the able Executive Committee, Secretary and Lecturer of the State Grange. Perfect harmony has ever pervaded our councils, and the most friendly and fraternal relations existing among us. And last, but not least, I have been aided, encouraged and strengthened in my work, by the cordial and fraternal greetings of Patrons wherever I have been, and expressions of satisfaction and confidence that I have heard on every hand.

In retiring from the Master's office, I do not wish it to be understood that I am retiring from the work of the Order in this State, or in any way severing that friendship, and the fraternal ties which have been formed with the thousands of noble men and women all over the State, who have upheld my hands and cheered me on in my fraternal work. I shall ever bear them in kind remembrance, and continue to labor with them in building up our noble Order and elevating our class.

If the Officers and Executive Committee of the State Grange have counseled and directed wisely, you, Patrons of Michigan, have acted nobly, and performed well your part.

This is as it should be, for this Order is yours, instituted for your benefit and will be what you make it. The officers whom you elect are your servants, and instruments in your hands for accomplishing your purposes.—They can do nothing without your aid; and I ask you to give the same support and encouragement to my successor, and the other officers of your choice, that you have given to me; and that the work so well begun, will be carried forward to grander results and more enduring good.

THE HERALD FOR 1881.

May last the initial number of the TECUMSEH HERALD greeted its patrons. Through all the succeeding years, it has sent its weekly message among the homes of Northern Lenawee, and exerted its humble influence for the business up-building of this portion of the Master's vineyard. Like all human undertakings it has had its ups and downs in life; it has been favored by the smiles of adversity, and has buffeted in the vacillation of prosperity. But the days of uncertainty in the HERALD's history have passed. It has become one of the fixed institutions of this community. It has come to stay!

Improvement and progress are the watchwords of the present age. The whole country is feeling the lifelikeness effects of a grand business boom, and the newspaper fraternity, being among the first to feel the quickening impulse, are extending their lines, advancing their outposts, making new conquests and gaining new vocations. In making the local history of this section of Michigan during the coming twelve months, the HERALD will occupy its accustomed position in the front rank. It has already achieved the distinction of being the best local newspaper in Lenawee county, and it will be a better local family paper during the year 1881 than it has ever been hitherto.

ITS CHARACTER.

The HERALD has never been and never claimed to be a neutral paper.—It has always been—since the present owner conducted it—an independent paper, and such it will continue to be. The HERALD will be the organ of no party, sect or clique, but it must not be supposed that it will have no opinions of its own. We shall freely express our views on all topics, whether of a political, religious, social, temperance or general character.

While we shall endeavor to eschew all mere partisan debate, in politics, we shall devote more attention and space than heretofore to the discussion of free trade and the tariff, of civil service reform, of revenue reform, of currency and trade, and all those economical and financial questions which are pressing themselves upon the people for solution. Party lines are fading away. People are looking more to principles and less to names. The voters of all parties are ready to discard "machine" politics, and to enlighten themselves upon those great questions of governmental policy on which parties must divide in the near future.

As a local, family newspaper the HERALD will continue to be the leading organ in the towns of Northern Lenawee. It will be a faithful mirror of the social and business life of this vicinity.

THE SPECIAL FEATURES.

1. A full assortment of local news from its regular township and neighborhood correspondents.

2. A good story and other reading matter for the "Family Circle."

3. A department of "County News" gleaned from the county press.

4. A carefully edited department of "State News."

5. An original "Washington Letter" during each session of Congress.

6. A "Farmers' Page," which will be devoted to general agricultural news and the reports of all farmers' clubs within our jurisdiction.

7. A column of extracts each week from the leading independent and party newspapers.

8. A live local department, devoted specially to Tecumseh news, supplemented with an illustrated corner each week.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Our subscription rates for 1881 will be $1.50 per year, cash in advance.

PREMIUMS.

To each new subscriber receiving his paper at a post office in Lenawee county, who shall pay cash in advance for one year, we will give a premium receipt book, entitled "The Home Guide." This is one of the best family receipt books ever published, and is worth at retail fifty cents. Subscribers sending in their names at once will be credited to Jan. 1, 1882. They will get the remaining numbers for December free. Old subscribers will receive the "Home Guide" on the same terms as new ones, upon the payment of all arrears up to the present time.

The HERALD for one year and Page's Map of Michigan, will be furnished for $2.00. The retail price of the map alone is $2.50.

This Map of Michigan is published by H. R. Page & Co., of Chicago, and is the best state Map in the market. It is 31 by 46 inches in size, mounted on rollers, contains a complete postoffice index, and every railroad in the state.

The HERALD for one year, and Webster's Pictorial Dictionary, will be furnished for $5.00, which is the price of the Dictionary alone.

This Dictionary contains 1040 pages and 600 engravings. It is rapidly taking the place of the unabridged, being just as good for ordinary use, and costing less than one-half as much.

These premiums will all be withdrawn on the first day of February next—Dec. 1st, 1880.

HIS VERY LAST DEAL.

"I never dealt the game again. I've dealt the game for twenty years, but I've done with it now. I made nothing and lost nothing, and but for a sight I once saw, I should probably be a gambler still. Hereby hangs a tale. Let me tell it.

"Some three years ago I ran a high-toned game at a certain place you probably know, for it strikes me that I saw you there. It was a square game, as I will leave anyone to say—a thriving game—for I dealt for half the bloods in town and often had as many as five layouts at a time, with two much business on hand to even get time to rest. One evening a young chap strolled in, with a sort of curious stare on his face, and I concluded that right there he was green. He was fair-headed, and had a pair of blue eyes and clean-cut features—an innocent-looking young fellow, if I ever saw one. It only required a glance to convince you that he was a stranger in the gambling-room. He was soon at home, though, for I saw in his blue eyes the love of play, and after that evening he was a constant visitor. He played his pile right up and never growled if his luck was hard—sometimes the hardest I think I ever saw. I've known him to lose at a single deal seven double shots.

"Business for me, of course, but somehow it almost seemed too bad. I couldn't say a word though, and yet I liked the boy. He had lots of the filthy. I think from the day he began he must have dropped a cool $100,000 on the game and he never growled.

"We both quit gambling the same night—he, poor lad, for sufficient reasons, and I because I loathed the game. It was in this wise:

"His coin gave out in a deal or two, and he put up a diamond ring, just to see his ill-luck out, you know. The chips soon went. He had a pin, a flaming stone in massive metal. He passed that in without a word and drew $50 in gold. So help me God! I wished him luck as heartily as any player there; but no, his last stake went my way on a losing acce. He drew $300 more. I think, on his watch and chain, and tried his fine bets again, but his luck was gone. My God! I'll never forget the pale, haggard look that crossed his face, but he was game. He never uttered a word and kept his chair like a pillar of stone; for a moment he seemed dazed at his reverses, but suddenly his eye caught the thin worn circlet of dull gold on his little finger. He looked at it for a little while, and a dark wave of hot crimson blood passed over his face, for the circlet seemed to cling even faster than the flashing gem he had passed in before. He at last stripped it off his finger and handed it to me. It came reluctantly, this worn, old ring. 'What can I have on this?' he asked. 'I don't know what its value is, but I'll redeem it first of all.' It might have cost $5 when new, but it was worthless then.

"Still, I passed out a fifty stack in return, just to let him try again. He planked it down in the pot, and then low upon the table he laid his face on his folded arms. Well, for a wonder, his luck changed, and he won three times. He took no notice of me as I told him when the limit barred, and so we played two fifty on each card. Would you believe it? In the deal the pot won out and never lost. And still he lay with his face hid in his arms. The deal was out and I shook him up, but not a muscle moved, and, raising his face, I started back in horror at the glassy expression of his eyes, for the boy was dead."

Outgrowing One's Friends.

There are men and women in public life whose pathway is marked by the "remains" of whilom friends whom they have squeezed dry and dropped, like so many sucked oranges. In politics it is said of such a man that he is kicked down the ladder by which he climbed. In literary or other walks the human sponge often swells up with the thought that he has "outgrown" his humble friends of other days. In private life the self-conscious soul contents itself with becoming more and more the center of its little circumference, taking none within its orbit who will not consent to revolve around it and emit light and warmth for its enjoyment. There have been many and noble definitions of what a friend is. People of real individuality, strength and sensitiveness doubtless have fewer real friends than they are apt to think, unless they have been cherishing, unconsciously, low ideals. But whatever a friend may not be, certainly that sweet and noble term is unmerited by one who, however generous in other directions, is selfish of himself.—Golden Rule.

LOVE in a cottage with corned beef and cabbage, double discounts married infelicity in a palace with quail on toast and champagne. This is true, young people, though it looks hard to believe.

"HE was a kind parent, a good citizen, and had three horses that could beat 2:30," is considered about the right thing for an obituary in Kentucky.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

A SOUTH HILL debating club is wrestling with: "Can a Community Exist without Women?" We think it might exist for a while, but then it wouldn't know what was going on.

Sod Houses.

On the prairies, far from the woods where log cabins are impracticable, the sod house is made as a substitute. To build one, a man goes on to the prairie with his team and breaking plow, and turns a straight smooth sod some three or four inches thick. This sod is very tough. When sufficient has been turned over the sod is cut into squares and laid up in a wall as though it were flat stones. Door frames and window frames are set in as the wall rises. When the height of one story is reached a small timber is set up at each end, and a ridge-pole placed upon them, and the sod wall built up or into the gable. On this ridge there rest smaller poles for rafters, and on these sod is laid in courses, the courses overlapping each other like shingles, "so many inches to the weather." The only money outlay is caused by windows and doors. If well built, the house will stand for years. Inside one may "sweeten to taste." In the ruder huts the walls are left uncovered. In others some are covered with cheap cloth, some with building paper and wall paper pasted over it, while some are plastered and made as comfortable as any room need to be. Once inside, you would not know but you were in a stone or brick house. Then you will sometimes find elegant furniture, the remains of better days, sometimes a piano and the skill to play it; choice books, which indicate literary tastes; the latest papers and magazines, which show that the inmates keep up with the times. Indeed, it is surprising to know how many families of refinement and cultured taste, being unfortunate, make a fresh start in life on the vast prairies.

An Eel Story.

Not long since a well on the farm of Abner Welsh, near Orangeville, Pa., in consequence of impurities in the water, was cleaned, and when the water was pumped out there was found in the edge of the wall near the bottom the decaying remains of a large eel. The history of this eel runs as follows: In the summer of 1859 Joseph Huges, who then resided on this farm, caught a number of eels, among which was one enormous eel, which he took great pride in exhibiting to his neighbors. The eels were left over night in a vessel standing on the well floor and in the morning the large eel was gone. The natural supposition was that it had been stolen, but the truth was that it had squirmed out of the tub, worked its way through the floor and fell twenty-three feet into the water. Some years later it was seen by a man cleaning the well. On account of the sandy bottom and abundance of water all attempts to catch it were fruitless. From time to to time it was seen by persons cleaning the well, until this season, when, the water becoming tainted, the well was again cleaned and his remains were found. Before the visitation of this eel small lizards were so plentiful in the well that great care had to be taking in using the water. Since then scarcely any have been found till this summer. Now they have again made their appearance.

A Bonanza of Bears and Lions.

John Rowles left his sheep ranch, near Keefer's Mill, for a day's sport. He did not get very far before he discovered bear tracks, both large and small. This discovery was followed up by his coming upon a number the "varmints" taking things easy under a spreading manzanita tree. John stood his ground manfully, and blazed away with his deadly Remington, and two of the full-grown bears were killed outright. The third, although badly wounded, went for his scalp, and John had to retreat to the crotch of a tree close by. With admirable forsight he froze to his gun, and as soon as the beast came up to his roosting-place he laid him out by a splendid shot through the eye. On coming down for his perch John feasted his eyes with the sight of his victims, and while enjoying this pleasure he heard some cubs crying for their mother. In looking around the brush he found two fine cubs, which he secured and took home. While on his way back he fell in with two California lions, which he bagged, thus making a perfect bonanza of game for one day's sport. Johnny feels bigger now than old Grant, and will not soon forget his splendid luck.—Chico (Cal.) Enterprise.

Chawed by a Bear.

Recently near Riverdale, in the Township of Greenock twelve miles from Walkerton, Ont., two women and their children, who had gone to the woods to pick acorns, were attacked by a bear. The women took up the younger children in the arms, and got away, but a boy about five years of age, son of a farmer named Charles Symons, was seized by the ferocious brute. Assistance arrived in about half an hour, the cries of the child calling for his father guiding the neighbors to the spot. The brute made off on their approach, and the child was found still alive but dreadfully mangled. His entrails were torn out, the ribs were broken from the back, and the flesh eaten off in large quantities. The poor little fellow died shortly after.

Recognition.

After he had chased the car for a block and a half he managed to get aboard, when, much to his indignation, he found one of his friends in the car, "You saw me running—why didn't you stop the car and not let me run myself to death?" and with a hooked finger he slung some of the perspiration from his brow out of the window. "I didn't recognize you at first. I could only see the upper part of your body from where I was sitting. If I had only seen your feet I would have known you several miles." The rest of the passengers glanced at his feet and smiled. They were regular beetle-crushers. The owner of them seemed to have all the explanation he needed for the time being.—Galveston News.

MY FIRST CIGAR.

[illegible]

And in my lone seclusion,
Safely removed afar
From all of society's confusion,
I smoked my first cigar.

Ah! bright the boyish fancies
Wrapped in the wreaths of blue;
My eyes grew dim, my head was light,
The woodshed round me flew.

Dark night closed in around me,
Reviless, without a star,
Grim death I thought had found me,
And spoiled my first cigar.

Ah! pallid was my noble brow,
The waning night was late,
My startled mother cried, in fear,
"My child, what have you ate?"

I heard my father's smothered laugh,
It seemed so strange and far,
I knew he knew, I knew he knew
I'd smoked my first cigar.

Bible Revision.

Concerning the revision of the Bible the Christian Union says: "The work is rapidly drawing to a close. We may expect the issue at the end of this year or the beginning of the next. The New Testament will be published by itself. The Old Testament cannot, properly, be issued before 1883, owing to its greater bulk. If we should indulge in predictions we should likely say that prejudiced minds will object to many changes that will be found, because some familiar phrases, like 'He who now letteth will let,' will (we doubt not) be rubbed out, and something better inserted. But thoughtful persons, and those who desire the meaning of the Greek original, cannot but be pleased with a translation in which forty-one Greek scholars of all Christian creeds are agreed. We are not afraid that in style any more than in translation these forty-one men will go astray and shock the Protestant world. These men know what is good English, and what is dignified English. They love the old English Bible as much as Bishop Coxe does, and they will see that it is not roughly treated. Our advice, then, is to keep quiet till the revised version appears, and then let us examine it, not in the light of our prejudices, but in the light of a scholarly common sense. All attempts now to say what it is, or to assail it, are premature. Our own writing is merely to show that we have reason to expect the best."

To Encourage Agriculture.

The Lime-Kiln Club Committee on Agriculture reported that all space wanted by the club at the State fair could be secured, and recommended that the members bestir themselves on the matter of entries. After considerable discussion it was resolved to offer premiums as follows in the name of the club:

1. For the largest watermelon grown in a cornfield eighty rods from a house, a prize of a wheelbarrow with red handles. Exhibitors must make affidavit that they did not set a watch on the melon-patch. In case no colored man lived within two miles of the cornfield, the exhibit will not count.

2. For the biggest 'possum grown in the State, a prize of 50 cents in cash.

3. For the best lot of ten dogs owned by any one colored family in the State, a prize of a grindstone making forty-four revolutions per minute.

4. For a dozen fowls which have roosted each night for six months in a hen-coop not guarded by a bear-trap, alarm-bell, spring-gun or other device to prevent a full and fair investigation of their manner of roosting, a prize of a photograph of an ice-house containing fifty tons of ice.

Later on several other premiums will probably be offered, and the club intends to offer a prize for the best specimen of frescoing on a board fence with a whitewash brush, competition open to the world.—Detroit Free Press.

Goats as Churners.

The most striking feature of the dairy ranch of F. S. Clough, in San Mateo canon, is the new dairy house which Mr. Clough recently completed at a cost of $1,500. It is 18x36 in ground dimensions, finished externally in rustic style, and inside is as trim and cleanly as the thrifty housewife's "best room." The butter-room, an apartment 10x15 feet in dimensions, is as inviting as a parlor. The apparatus for handling the milk and making the butter is complete in every detail, and is designed throughout for the saving of labor. The churn holds fifty-two gallons of cream, and turns out from 100 to 120 pounds of butter at each churning. It is worked by goat power, the appliances being a treading-wheel eighteen feet in diameter, which connects with and operates a shaft running into the dairy house, and this in turn connecting with cog-wheels working the dashers. Mr. Clough says that the goats in operating the wheel indulge their natural propensities for climbing, and they apply themselves to the work with great gusto. The herd consists of some eight or ten animals, ranging from the grandmother and old "Billy" with the whiskers down to the youngling not over a foot high. When released from their pens, they one and all, great and small, run bleating for the wheel, and the only trouble to contend with thereafter is the excess of power which they are apt to give it in the course of their frolicsome gambols.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Express.

Powerful Ocean Steamships.

Twenty years ago the largest steamships afloat, such as Brunel's prophetic creation, the Great Eastern, which was a prodigy of engineering skill, did not reach 700 feet in length, 82 feet in breadth, 8,000 tons in tonnage, or 4,000 horse-power indicated. We have before us at this moment a list of 50 merchant steamers sailing in the year 1880, from Southampton and other southern ports, which the largest vessels then frequented, and the list includes but 19 ships of more than 300 feet in length, none of which reached the limits of size and power just given, and the whole of which belonged to two companies, viz., the Royal Mail and the Peninsular and Oriental. At the present moment we have afloat and at work the White Star liners, some of them of 445 feet in length, 45 feet in breadth, and nearly 5,000 indicated horse-power; the Inman liners, comprising such ships as the City of Berlin, 560 feet by 44½ feet broad, and of about the same steam-power; the Orient, of 445 feet by 46½ feet, with engines developing 5,600 horse-power; the Arizona, of about the same size, with still greater steam power and speed; and many other splendid vessels but little inferior to any of the foregoing. And these grand steamers—many of which reach the quays of New York with greater punctuality than railway trains reach the London suburbs from Victoria and Charing-cross, and would reach our quays with equal punctuality if they could avoid the abominable sands that bar the Mersey—are the forerunners of still larger and more powerful vessels now taking shape upon the banks of the Clyde and elsewhere. The Cunard steel ship, the Servia, now building by Messrs. Thompson, of Glasgow, is 500 feet by 50 feet, with over 10,000 indicated horse-power, and will, therefore, doubtless possess a speed considerably in advance of that of the very fastest ship at present afloat in the mercantile marine. The Inman steamship City of Rome, building of iron at Barrow, will be still larger, having a length of [illegible] feet, a breadth of 52 feet, a gross registered tonnage of 8,000, and a steam power nearly equal to that of the Servia. The Guion line is to be increased by ships of almost equal size and power, and the Allan line is building others equal to the finest of the White Star boats. Notwithstanding the number and magnitude of the passenger steamers now running between America and this country the traffic is so great that it has only been possible to secure accommodation by arranging passage many weeks, and even months, in advance, while the rapidly increasing population and wealth of the United States and of Canada make it certain that the interchange of agricultural produces and manufactured goods between them and ourselves will go on increasing.—London Times.

Who was Bluebeard?

A gentleman who saw the gray, forbidding castle of Bluebeard rising above the station of Champtoce, France, tells who the frightful hero of the nursery was:

Some reader may ask, "Who was this real, historical Bluebeard?"

I answer that in Brittany he was the Sieur Gilles de Retz, a great feudal lord, who possessed vast estates and great power in this neighborhood in the latter part of the fourteenth and beginning of the fifteenth centuries, and was, besides, a marshal of France.

This castle was his stronghold, and he ruled it and the Loire country around with a hand of iron and a sword of fire.

Gifted in youth with physical strength and beauty, and an enormous fortune, he impaired both by all sorts of indulgences.

When too late, with a defiled and bloated body, he found himself lashed by the scorpion whip that is always sure to follow sin.

Instead of growing penitent, he only became more bloody and relentless.

Seduced by a wicked and cunning alchemist to believe that by bathing in human blood he could claim back his vanished health, beauty, and spirits, he entrapped children and young persons of both sexes, murdered them in the dungeons of the castle with his own hand, and bathed in their warm blood.

It was believed that more than a hundred were thus murdered.

After years of impunity the matter became so notorious and spread so much fear through the country that the people rose in a mass against him, made him a prisoner, and carried him to Nantes.

There he was tried by his suzerain lord, the Duke of Brittany, and condemned to be burnt alive at the stake, a judgment carried into execution in 1440 on what is now the Chaussee de la Madeleine, on the Gloriette Island, in front of where the great hospital now stands.

The Quickest Trains in the World.

The pace of the quickest trains in England, says an English paper, is greater by ten miles an hour than that of the quickest trains of any other country. In Great Britain the average velocity of the express is fifty miles an hour. In Belgium it never exceeds forty-one miles an hour; between Paris and Bordeaux it is thirty-nine and a half miles an hour. In Russia and in some parts of Switzerland the rate is twenty-seven miles an hour. Per contra, in England railway traveling is attended with more risk than in any other country in the world. Yet even thus the perils of the steam locomotive are much exaggerated, for a French statistician, after a very laborious examination of the deaths occurring from railway accidents over the surface of the whole earth, states the result of his examination thus: "If a person were to live continually in a railway carriage, and spend all his time in railway traveling, the chances in favor of his dying from railroad accident would not occur until he was 960 years old."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

BROOKLYN.

1882 flings aside the shadows that cumbered the flight of its predecessor and displays a brilliancy all untarnished by the rough and tumble wear of this wicked world. If good appearances count favorably at first introduction we may indulge in great expectations, and though certain to relinquish them as our acquaintance progresses there still remains some happiness in not knowing which day dream will vanish first, and we cannot diet for the dainties until the time comes.

Rev. Eichbaum thinks of remaining with us a while. We look better since he met with strangers only.

We are as lively as a pan of milk, just now. Our weddings all occurred before the holidays, and the only amusement left us is drafting a series of good resolutions that are to last 365 days until spoiled sooner by too much collision.

As my friends are too bashful to tell how they intend growing figs among leaves it would be a one-sided confidence if I should state my method.

PHARLIP.

HOLLOWAY.

The weather has taken a change for the better.

The literary meeting last Saturday evening passed off pleasantly. The discussion of the question "that the death penalty should be abolished" was decided in favor of the affirmative. After the discussion the election of officers took place, which resulted as follows:

President—C. W. Arner.
Vice Pres.—F. F. Rogers.
Secretary—Jennie Boyd.
Librarian—Ed. Arner.

The society will meet again next Saturday evening. The question is, Resolved—That the Military Academy at West Point should be abolished. They intend to rent an organ soon, which will add greatly to the interest of the program. In response to invitations given by Ella Holdridge, daughter of our worthy supervisor, about thirty-five of her young friends of Raisin and Tecumseh, gathered at her home on Friday evening of last week and had a social visit. Altho' the roads were very rough and the night quite cold, all felt themselves well repaid for their inconvenience in getting there. Mr. & Mrs. Holdridge are among the most respected people of our township and their hospitality is excelled by none.

Rumor says Raisin is booked for two weddings this winter. We should like to know the particulars.

ADDISON.

Again our jottings commence with the new year, new items, and we trust new and improved ideas touching the manner and matter composing model local correspondence.

The chilling wand of old Jack Frost has at last passed over our humble villa, while earth air and water alike recognize its magic influence.—The village mill pond now affords an excellent opportunity for skating—a fact fully appreciated by the young people.

Mr. Levi Salsbury has organized a class in vocal music, with flattering prospects. Meetings for instruction and practice will occur regularly on Tuesday evenings of each week.

The winter term of the schools here opened Monday of last week. Pupils are making fine progress in study under the efficient management of Prof. Woodward and assistant.

Rev. Duke Whitely's sermon Sabbath P. M. was in favor of the latter days as compared with the former.—Men were more favored both secularly, socially and spiritually. The world ignoring the lethargy of former time is making glorious strides toward ultimate perfection in every department of human existence. We concede the sermon as very highly encouraging whether the actual facts are or not.

CLINTON.

A. G. Burton spent a few days in Detroit last week.

Union meetings are being held this week in the different churches.

C. W. Clough, of the Brooklyn Exponent, and family, have been visiting friends in this place.

The new walk on the east side of E. G. Cook's residence presents a fine appearance, and is certainly quite an improvement.

Mrs. John Kimball's house on the corner of Franklin and Railroad sts. is completed. Mr. A. Huntington, superintendent of the woolen mill will move his family there soon.

Dr. J. W. Burchard lectured Monday evening at the Reform Club on "Pork." The Dr's. announced investigations and discoveries are tending to make people more cautious about the above named article of food.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Rowland, of Tecumseh, ate turkey on New Year's day at Frank Thompson's. We are glad some one took pity on Ed. and gave him a warm meal. Judging from his size we should conclude that such an event was an uncommon occurrence.

Ed. Clark opens his store this week with a new stock of boots and shoes. He has a finer and larger assortment than has ever been kept here, and purchasers cannot fail to be suited.—He has secured the services of Miss Carrie Muir as clerk.

Col. Copeland, of South Bend, Ind., will lecture at this place Saturday evening of this week, on "Lying as a fine art." The majority of people who have heard him in his previous addresses here acknowledge his success as a lecturer, and he will without doubt meet with a large audience.

MACON CENTER.

Good time to move eggs and invalids.

The holidays have passed unobserved except a few private dinners—the Christmas tree at the German church where the children and a few special favorites were made happy—and a dance at Lake Ridge Jan. 2. The boys report 120 couple and a splendid time.

Dr. Ambrose, student of the university, is spending the holidays at home.

Ella Vescelius has returned from Whitehall accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Durling, who are visiting friends.

The officers elect of the Red Ribbon club are,

President—A. Easlick.
Vice Pres.—J. W. Osborn.
Secretary—Charles Foot.
Treasurer—R. Remington.
Chaplain—J. W. Baker.
Ex-Com.—Josie Clarkson, Aggie Cadmus, C. V. Skinner.
Musical Director—Julia Easlick.
Organist—Rosa Easlick.

At the last meeting, Saturday evening, in connection with a literary program, the question, Resolved, That drinking intoxicating liquors at the place of sale should be prohibited by law, was discussed by A. Easlick and J. C. Mills, affirmative and M. J. Martin, and R. R. Hall, negative.—Decision, by a committee of five, in favor of the affirmative, 4 to 1. There will be a "Chin Social" at the hall this week Saturday evening, with supper, at ten cents per couple, for the benefit of the club choir. Everybody invited.

J. C. Bontecou's lecture at the hall on the evening of the 26th, ult., bro't out a full house, and was a grand success intellectually, but only two persons took stock in the "State Alliance." Some cannot see where the dividends come in.

The officers elect of Macon Grange are as follows:

The preparations for the Farmers' Institute are progressing finely. All the committees are at work. The program will be published next week.

What a pity that Guiteau could not have been tried by some backwood justice, who would have disposed of the case in an afternoon and evening, and got at all the bottom facts, so that our national exchequer would not have been disgraced by the humiliating spectacle of the past two months.

MACON.

The Sunday School Concert on Christmas eve passed off very pleasantly. An interesting programme was presented. Rev. J. A. De Spelder favoring the audience with a fine Christmas poem.

The social at Mrs. Isaac Collins' last Wednesday evening was declared a success by all who participated.—Owing to the exceedingly moist condition of the roads at that time, many were prevented from attending.

Effie Thomas is rapidly recovering from her long and serious illness. Alta's improvement is less marked, although it is thought all danger is passed. Dr. Morden has rendered most efficient service and has been untiring in his attention during their sickness.

Elva, the oldest child of Willard Gay, is dangerously ill with typhoid fever, although at present writing Dr. Howell, the attending physician, considers the case as not altogether hopeless. Two of the other children were attacked with the fever about a week ago, but in a less malignant form, and are recovering. Mr. Gay is in poor health, and as the support of a large family rests entirely upon him, the people of Macon, in token of their sympathy, made up a purse of $100 which was presented as a New Years' gift.

Frank J. Dennis, of Topeka, Kan., step-son of Israel Pennington, has lately returned to the old home. Five weeks ago he was seized with paralysis, which for a time rendered him helpless. He was accompanied as far as Chicago by his brother, H. J. Dennis, of Topeka, and finished the trip home under the care of D. C. Pennington. He suffered no ill effect from the journey, but rather seemed benefited. It is thought that with good care he may yet be restored to health.

The M. E. church has been undergoing repairs, and is decidedly improved. The walls are covered with a delicately tinted paper and the wood work finished with a walnut graining. Last summer the outside of the church was newly painted, and blinds added, so that both the exterior and interior now presents a very attractive appearance.

In the happy language of a neighboring correspondent several "oranges blossomed" in our vicinity the past week.

John R. Clark, of Tecumseh, did not lecture last Friday evening as announced, the lecture committee being merciful and not wishing to subject Mr. Clark to the torture of a ride over the rough roads, thought it advisable that his coming should be postponed, and wrote him accordingly. It is hoped he will arrange again to come and an opportunity be given the people of hearing a good temperance lecture.

RIDGEWAY.

Purdy Haight, of Kalkaska, is visiting friends in this vicinity.

Important real estate changes have taken place within a week. Samuel Barlow 40 acres to Jas. Linn, $2800. Jas. C. Freer to Samuel Barlow, 110 acres, $8500. It is probable that Geo. Pocklington will take 30 acres of the Freer farm south of the road.

A child of Lewis Priest is quite sick with malarial fever.

Miss Velina Underwood, whom we reported last week as very sick, is improving.

A gathering of the Russell family took place at Edward Russell's last Saturday, it being the 59th anniversary of Mr. & Mrs. Asa Russell's wedded life. Their ages are respectively 82 and 80.

James Leonard and family of Napoleon spent New Years with J. B. Kemp.

Free Hunter returned to Toledo on Monday. He expects to finish his course of Telegraphy in two weeks.

It was predicted that there would be two or three weddings during the holidays, but I have failed to hear of any at the present writing.

Mr. William Jorden and his sister Edith, of Jonesville, have been visiting their friend Miss Delia Kemp during the past week.

For some reason unknown the date of the entertainment given by Josie M. Butrick has been changed to the evening of Jan. 13th.

We have to note the death of Andrew Burtless, who was supposed to be recovering one week ago. In Mr. Burtless we lose one of our most highly esteemed citizens. He leaves a wife and daughter to mourn his untimely loss. They have the sympathy of the entire community in their affliction. The funeral services were held at the house on Sunday morning, Rev. A. W. Wilson, pastor of the M. E. church officiating.

OLD SAYINGS.

As poor as a church mouse, as thin as a rail,
As fat as a porpoise, as rough as a gale;
As brave as a lion, as spry as a cat;
As bright as a sixpence, as weak as a rat.

As proud as a peacock, as sly as a fox;
As mad as a March hare, as strong as an ox;
As fair as a lily, as empty as air;
As rich as a Crœsus, as cross as a bear.

As pure as an angel, as neat as a pin;
As smart as a steel-trap, as ugly as sin;
As dead as a door-nail, as white as a sheet;
As flat as a pancake, as red as a beet.

As strong as an apple, as black as your hat;
As brown as a berry, as blind as a bat;
As mean as a mouse, as fast as a flock;
As plump as a partridge, as sharp as a stick.

As calm as a pulsing, as dark as a pall;
As hard as a millstone, as bitter as gall;
As fine as a fiddle, as clear as a bell;
As dry as a herring, as deep as a well.

As light as a feather, as firm as a rock;
As stiff as a poker, as calm as a clock;
As green as a goslin, as brisk as a bee;
And now let me stop, lest you weary of me.

BE KIND.

Be kind to all whom you may meet,
On this, our fleeting earth;
Oh, cast not down beneath your feet
The humblest creature God gives birth

Let not this world allure your heart
From principles pure and true;
Place not your love on wealth, or art,
Be kind to all, in all you do.

The rich, the poor, at last must be
In common at the grave:
Death sends us all to eternity,
While no regrets can save.

WHY I JOINED THE DETECTIVES.

THE RESULT OF TOO MUCH GARRULITY WITH A STRANGER.

"Can I sit with you?"
"Certainly, sir."
"Nice weather?"
"Splendid, indeed."
"Crops growing finely?"
"Yes—couldn't do better."

I was sitting in a car on a Wisconsin railway, one day, years ago, when a good looking, pleasant spoken man came along stopped at my seat, and the above conversation took place, the latter part of it after I had given him part of my seat.

Now I am regarded as a social man. I like a joke; more so then than now. On entering a railroad car I always looked about for a talkative man, and then I got as close to him as possible and drained him dry, if the journey was long enough.

And I want to state one thing more. Left an orphan before I could realize the sad event which made me one, I got kicked here and cuffed there, and grew up between folks, as they say. I ought to have had, at the time of which I write, a pretty thorough knowledge of human nature, and have been able to read evil in a man's face if he intended me evil. I did not pride myself on being over sharp, but the knocking around among strangers ought to have given any one a good experience.

Well, the stranger and I fell into an easy train of conversation as we rode together, and in ten minutes I began to enjoy his company. He was a well made fellow, finely dressed, and wore a fine watch and a simon-pure diamond ring. I never saw a man who could talk so easily and so pleasantly. It seemed that he had but to open his mouth and the words fell right out.

I had traveled in the South; so had he. I had heard the roar of the Pacific; he knew all about it. I had been up in a balloon, down in a mine, been blown up, smashed up, and repaired again and again; my new friend had experienced all these things, and was wishing for something of a more startling nature. We agreed on politics, neither had any religion, and I had never met such a railroad companion.

Did you ever meet a man, who, though a stranger to you ten minutes before, could wrest from you your secrets which you had sworn to yourself not to reveal? Well, he was such a man. It was not long before he commenced asking me questions. He did not seem to quiz or draw me out, but he asked me questions in such a sly, roundabout way, that before I knew it I was giving him my history.

I was at that time on the point of being admitted to the bar of Wisconsin as a student of Law & Law, of Brieville. The firm were old lawyers with lucrative practice, and it had been talked over that within a month I was to be a "Co." of the firm. A year before, a farmer named Preston, down about four miles from Grafton, died, and his matters had been put into the hands of Law & Law for settlement. Preston had died rich. He had money in bank, railroad stock and mortgages, etc., and everything was settled up to the satisfaction of the relict and fatherless.

About a year before his death, being pinched for money and not wishing to sell anything at a sacrifice, Preston had given a mortgage on his farm for $3,000. While the paper read "for one year from date," there was a verbal agreement that it should be lifted any day that Preston desired. A month afterwards, having the funds to clear off the paper, the "old money bags" holding it refused to discharge, wishing to secure his interest for a year.

I was on my way to learn the date of expiration. A fire among my office papers had destroyed the memoranda, and I must go down and get the date from old Grip, who lived south of Grafton about five miles. The stranger pumped all this out of me in about ten minutes, and yet I never once suspected he was receiving any information.

"I am not positive," I added, "but I am pretty sure the time is the 13th, which would be Tuesday next."

"And then your folks will send down the money and discharge the mortgage, of course," he queried.

"Oh, yes, I shall most likely bring it down." I replied, and it never occurred to me how imprudent I was.

He turned the conversation into other channels, and did not once attempt to pump me further. We got to Grafton at 10:50, and, to my great surprise, he announced that he was to stop in town on business for a few days. I had not asked his avocation, while he knew everything about me.

We went to the hotel, had dinner, and then I secured a livery team and drove out, getting through the whole business so that I was back to take the 3:20 express east. My friend was on the porch of the hotel as I drove up, carrying the same honest dignified face.

"Well, did you find out?" he inquired, in a pleasant way.

"Yes, it was on the 13th, as I expected," I replied.

We had lunch together, and when we parted I had no more idea of meeting him again than I had of going to Europe within a week or so. In fact, he told me that he would not again return to Brieville. Instead of writing he gave me his card, a little piece of pasteboard, and I read, "George Raleigh," in old

Everything at the office went on as usual, and the 13th came at length. Law & Law had arranged with me to go down with the money, and I looked upon it as a business of no special importance.

"We know you are all right," remarked the senior partner, as I was about to go, "but I want to give you a word of warning, nevertheless. Don't take any strangers into your confidence, until you have passed out the money, and look out who sits next to you."

It was something new for him to caution me, and I could not but wonder at it; but in the hurry of getting aboard the train I forgot what he had said. Ordinary prudence had induced me to place the money which was all in bank bills and dividends into three packages, under my shirt and next to my skin, where the deft hand of a pickpocket could not reach it.

Interested in a newspaper, time flew by as the train flew past, and at length the hoarse voice of the brakeman warned me that I had reached Grafton. I had leaped down and was making for the livery stable when I heard a familiar voice, and looked up to see Raleigh. He was seated in a buggy, and had seemingly waited for me to come in.

"Don't express your surprise," he began, as I stopped at the wheel. "I did intend to go away; I changed my mind and like this section so well that I am going out to-day to look at a farm with a view of purchasing—come, ride up to the hotel."

We rode up, ordered lunch, and while we were discussing it Mr. Raleigh discovered that the farm he was going to see was just beyond that of old Grip's.

How fortunate! I could ride out with him, see the farm, return in his company, and he was greatly pleased.

I was also greatly pleased. If any one had told me as we got into the buggy that George Raleigh meant to return with my blood upon his hands I should have believed him a lunatic, and yet George Raleigh had planned to do that very thing.

It was a lovely day in June, and the cool breeze and the sight of meadows and green groves made my heart grow larger. My companion was very talkative, but he didn't even hint at my errand. He talked as far away as he could.

"Oh! excuse me!" he exclaimed, after we had passed a mile beyond the village, and were among the farm houses. "I should have offered you this before."

He drew from his pocket a small flask of wine and handed it to me. Now, I was temperate in regard to drinks. In fact, I detested the sight and smell of anything intoxicating. But I had not the moral courage to tell him so, and hand back the flask undisturbed. I feared to offend him and so I drank perhaps three good swallows. He called my attention to the woods on the left as he received back the flask, and when I looked around again he was just removing it from his mouth, as if he had drank heartily.

In about five minutes I began to feel queer. The fence along the road seemed to grow higher and the trees grow larger; something came to my ears that the rattle of the buggy sounded a long way off.

"How strange! Why, I believe I am going to be sick!" I exclaimed, holding on to the seat with all my might.

"You do look strange," he replied, with a snaky smile stealing over his face; "I shouldn't wonder if it was apoplexy."

I did not suspect the game he had played. His words were like an echo, and his face seemed twice as large as it was. My head began to spin and my brain began to snap and crack, and I was greatly frightened.

"You are badly off," he continued, looking into my face. "I will drive as fast as possible and get a doctor."

My tongue was so heavy that I could not reply. I clutched the seat, shut my eyes, and he put his horse at his best pace. We met a farmer's team, and I remember that one of the occupants of the wagon called out to know what ailed that man. Raleigh did not reply, but urged his horse forward.

About three miles from Grafton was a long stretch of forest, and this was soon reached. The pain in my head was not so violent, and I was not so badly affected when opening my eyes. I had settled into a sort of dumb stupor, with a brain so benumbed that I had to say to myself: "This is a tree, that is a stump," etc., before I could make sure I was not wrong. Half a mile down the road after we struck the forest, and then Raleigh turned the horse into a blind road leading back into the woods. I could not understand what he intended. I tried to grapple with the question, but could not solve it.

"Well here we are!" exclaimed Raleigh, when we had reached a point about forty rods from the main road.

He stopped the horse, got out and hitched him, and then came around to the wheel.

"You don't feel just right, but I guess you will be better soon," he remarked. "Come let me help you down."

He reached up his arms, and I let go the seat and fell into them. It seemed to me as if I weighed a ton, but he carried me along without any effort, and laid me down within about a rod of a fence which ran along on one side of an old pasture. Just now I began to get a little better. The effects of the drug were wearing off, and I got a fair suspicion that something unusual had happened. But I was powerless to move a limb; the sensation was like that when your foot goes to sleep.

"Can you speak? inquired Raleigh, bending over me; "because if you can it will save me some trouble. I want to know just where you stored that money."

Now I began to realize my situation. His face looked natural again, and the load was off my tongue. I also felt that I could move my fingers a little.

"George Raleigh! are you going to rob me? I asked, finding my voice at last.

"Well, some folks might call it 'robbing,' but we dress up the term a little by calling it the only correct financial way of equalizing the floating currency, so that each one is provided for and no one left out."

"You shan't have the money. I will die first!" I yelled, rising a little.

"Ah, I see—didn't take quite enough," he coolly remarked. "Well I have provided for this."

He went to the buggy, procured rope and a gag, and kneeled down beside me. I had but little strength yet, and he conquered me in a moment. Lying on my right side, looking at the fence, he tied my hands behind me and then placed the gag into my mouth.

"There now! You see you are nicely fixed up, and all because you acted like a fool, instead of a sensible young lawyer, soon to be admitted to the bar."

While he was speaking, indeed while he was tying me, I had caught sight of the face of a little girl looking at us from between the rails of the fence. I could see her great blue eyes, and knew that she was frightened. There were red stains around her mouth and on the little hand resting on the rail, and I knew that she was some farmer's child searching for strawberries. I could not warn her of her danger, and feared that she would be seen or heard. While Raleigh was tying the last knot, I winked at the little girl as hard as I could, hoping that she would move away. But she did not go.

"Well, now for the money," said Raleigh, and he began searching my pockets. He went from one to the other, removing all the articles; felt down my boot-leg, and finally passed his hand over my bosom, and found the money.

"Ha, here it is!" he exclaimed, drawing out the money. "I don't hardly believe old Grip will see any of this to-day."

He sat down near my head, undid the package, and was cool enough to go at it and count the money. As he commenced the little girl waved her hand at me. My heart went thumping, for I expected she would utter a word or shout; but she sank back from sight, and I caught a gleam of her frock as she passed through the grass.

"You see, my young friend," remarked Raleigh, as he drew off one of his boots and deposited some of the bills in it, "there's nothing like transacting business as it should be transacted. Some men would have shot or stabbed you, but it is only apprentices who do such work. All the real gentlemen of our calling do business as gentlemen should."

He drew off the other boot, and placed some "fifties" and "twenties" in it, and then continued:

"I have it all planned out how to deal with you as soon as I get this money disposed of about my person. I shall lay you on your back and pour the rest of the wine down your throat. There's enough of it to make you sleep until to-morrow night, and by that time I shall be hundreds of miles away. As soon as I see the drug take effect, I shall untie your hands and remove the gag. When you come out of your sleep—if you ever do—you had better crawl out to the road, where you will most likely meet some traveler soon. I want to use the horse and buggy, otherwise I would leave them for you."

How cooly he talked. He treated the matter as if it were a regular transaction in which I fully acquiesced. He had me a fast prisoner, and I felt that he could do just as he pleased. While I was thinking, I saw the little white face appear again, but in a moment it faded away and its place was taken by the sunburned phiz of a farmer. He looked from me to Raleigh and back again, and I winked back again in a way which he readily understood. His face disappeared and I felt that I should be saved.

"No, old Grip won't get his tin to-day," mused Raleigh, storing away the bills in his pockets. "You will go back to Law & Law feeling put out, and cut up, but they cannot blame you; it is not your fault at all. True, had you minded your business on the car and not been free with a stranger, this would not have happened. I was on my way to Milwaukee, and had no thought of such rich pickings here.

I saw nothing of the farmer; Raleigh finished his counting, and I made up my mind that the farmer was afraid to interfere, and had run away." My heart went down as Raleigh got up, for I saw that he was about to carry out his plans for further drugging me. He turned me on my back, sat down astride of me, and then pulled out the flask.

"Now, in just about a minute we'll be through with the business," he remarked, trying to put the mouth of the flask between my jaws.

I rolled my head to one side, and he did not succeed. He was jamming the flask against my teeth, when I caught the sound of a soft step, the crash of a club, and Raleigh rolled off my body. He tried to leap up, but three or four farmers struck him down, and one of the blows rendered him senseless. Before he came to I was free of ropes and gag, and we had him securely bound.

Over beyond the pasture a farmer and his hands were making hay. "Little Blue Eyes," only 8 years old, had, fortunately for me, witnessed a part of Raleigh's proceedings. She had hurried back to her father and told him that "a man was all tied up out there." Understanding the situation, he and his men had moved around so as to secure an advantage, and Raleigh's capture was the result.

When the rascal found his senses he was terribly taken back, and cursed enough for a whole Flanders army. We took him back to Grafton, and when I saw him again he was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a sentence of fifteen years.

The mortgage was duly lifted, and the gift which Law & Law sent to Katie Grey kept her in dresses for many a year.

For myself, I felt so humiliated at having fallen into the rascal's trap, and so wrathy at the treatment, that I determined to devote myself to a thorough warfare on all rogues. I therefore joined a detective force, and after due study, took my place as a full-fledged detective.

First Romances of the Spring.

It is moonlight on the hill. From out the trees a gentle zephyr creeps to rob the hyacinth of its perfumed breath, and adown the garden walk the whip-poor-will lends his monotone of sadness unto the balmy night. Sleep, with brooding wings, sits silent o'er the scene. But, hark! it is the tinkling guitar strummed by the lonely Ausustus. He comes. Beneath the vine-clad window in the ghostly gloaming he pauses, and up the flower-trellised wall he shoots a melancholy tenor fraught with the passionate inquiry, "Must I leave thee here alone?" No answer returns save the haunting echo and the low clicking of a distant door. The scene changes.

It is the back-yard tableau. A white-robed old man bends above a chained dog, and soothes his too eager spirit as he loosens the collar. A low voice says "See-eeek him, Bull—take a short cut round the rose-bush." A flash—and the old man is alone. The clatter of a fallen guitar comes from the front; a sound like the rush of a steeple-chase nearing the hedge is borne back, and neck and neck two figures cross the picket fence to disappear down the dim perspective of the deserted street. Then the old man meets Bull as he returns on the outer walk, and removes in a discourged manner a dark object from his foaming mouth, while the animal retires to his kennel in silence. The door opens and shuts on the white-robed form, and all is still again. But as he gets back into bed and shoves the old lady's feet out of the warm place, he mutters, "Bull is getting old, and serenades don't pay divydends like they used to; but, if the business keeps up, I think, you will be justified in starting another patch-work quilt, Maria. That last fellow left real cassumer.

"What sort of sample did you get?"

"Tolerable fair. There was a long strip with a pistol-pocket hanging to it, and one gallus button.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

RATIONAL LIVING.—Thousands of people might be enjoying reasonable lives with opportunities for self culture, for social enjoyment, and for charitable efforts, whose whole energy is absorbed in the desperate struggle to secure superfluities to comfort.

"Silence is Golden."

Words spoken in season are of great value; but now and then, even with our best and dearest friends, there come seasons when the gift of silence is far more to be desired than the most royal gift of eloquence.

With almost every one there will arise something that tempts to dispute; when to refrain from a reply would be the better as well as the harder way, when even "a soft answer" has not half the power of perfect silence.

With the ignorant and passionate it is not only useless, but the wildest folly to dispute. We doubt if Solomon, with all his wisdom, was in the trustworthy state of mind when he advised to "answer a fool according to his folly." With great self-control sensible people may dispute or disagree over points of interest, and yet not forget the laws of kindness and common sense. But to attempt to answer "a fool according to his folly," is to descend to his level.

In the household there are many things which demand forbearance and a good stock of patience. In a large family hardly an hour goes by but little shadows cross the horizon which a trifling irritation might change into dark clouds, threatening a storm, yet by "setting a watch over the door of the mouth," they pass over without a falling shower.

The wife, more than any one, should have full possession of the crowning household grace of silence. Men are so unlike women in this respect that while they love strongly and faithfully, they do not depend on the daily outward expression of it as much as women do. A loving wife can forget her own bodily need to cater for the taste or minister to the comfort of those she loves. But these expressions of affection and tenderness she can not dispense with without suffering loss. They are her life. With them her nature expands, broadens, becomes richer and nobler; without them she withers and becomes greatly impoverished. Some husbands little know how quickly their wives may deteriorate and become mere cold machines if they pass heedlessly on their way, forgetting the heart-famine they leave at home.

But no matter how much a wife craves gentle attention and loving notice, it is better that she should teach herself to know the great strength she may command by silence, not unamiable silence, but that which gently tends upward toward peace, and its patient continuance will sometimes open a husband's eyes to his unintentional neglect and make him love and honor his wife all the more for the quiet lesson she taught him. There are times in a man's life, far more than in a woman's, when any reply to careless remarks, or complaints of inattention or seeming neglect, would be unwise and threaten trouble.

Can you effect a change by constant repining? Does not that mood enhance the evil and risk changing carelessness now and then into a settled indifference? And by expostulations, complaints and perhaps reproaches, does not a wife endanger her own love? While that shines undiminished there is always hope that the "dove of peace and promise" will yet fold its wings and take up its abode there, and the last days of that household be brighter and more lovely than the first.

Try the virtue of silence, when tempted to "last speeches," and see if it will not do more to lift the cloud than the bitter invectives which wounded pride and irritated love are sure to utter. The first, faithfully acted upon, brings hope of better times; the latter, if not at once and forever dismissed, is sure destruction of all true love and domestic peace.

Flying Fish.

Flying Fish, or "sea-swallows," as they are also called, because of their resemblance to swallows in flight, are truly wonderful inhabitants of the deep. On first seeing them one might reasonably suppose them to be birds. There are three or four branches of the family, the more gaily decked being found only in the Mediterranean and Red Seas, while the common flying fish is met with all over the ocean within the tropics. Seldom or never does the little creature venture outside the warm water of the tropical seas, his delicate organization rendering him unfit to brave the cold temperature of either north or south. In size the fish is about equal with the herring. It is of a blueish brown color at the top of the back, white on the belly, and yellowish red on the tip of the tail and fins. Its large pectoral fin stretches the length of its body, and is of a deep blue color. The tail is forked, the lower bend being longer than the upper. The head is scaly, and the whole body is squarish shaped. Some of the fish have four wings, others only two. The fish clears the water by the end of its tail, keeping its wings close until free of the brine; it then flies with a rapid motion till the wings become dry, which generally happens in the course of sixty yards. A touch of the water enables it to fly on about twenty yards further, and then the fish returns to the sea, exhausted. It does not rise more than six feet above the water, and seldom flies for more than a hundred yards.

As regards the line of flight, some people profess to say that the fish fly against the wind. This may be so sometimes, but it is accidental; the fish fly just where they imagine they may get out of the way of bonitas, albacores, and dorodos, their sworn foes, who seem to spend their whole time in hunting these unfortunate little creatures. Often it happens that, in their anxiety to get away from submarine enemies, they fall into destruction in the air; for sea-birds on the prowl know that the flying fish must come out, and wait for them accordingly, with all the patience of deer-stalkers.

The flying fish itself has not any teeth; its food, when time is allowed it to snatch a meal, consists of shrimps, infusoria, and the ther small kind of medusa. But at best it must eat in haste, for the number of its destroyers is equalled only by their voracity. Sometimes in their flight they will come on board ship, flapping down on deck exhausted, and unable to rise again. They have even been known to break the glass of the binnacle light, so great is the force with which they impel themselves. Light seems to form a great attraction for them, and they will fly at night in crowds in the direction of a glare. Advantage is taken of this known fact by the fishermen, who go out at night with nets rigged on poles sticking out on all sides of the boat. When the fishing-ground has been reached, a fire is made in a brazier that is reared in the middle of the boat. Soon the moths of the sea are drawn to their destruction. They come, see, and are conquered, falling down helplessly entangled in the meshes of the net. The supply of them, especially in the Carribean Sea, and around the West India islands, seems to be inexhaustible, and the demand for their bodies is commensurate with the supply.

Rev. Joseph Cook calls Niagara a "dateless roar." He might call Courtney a dateless rower, too.

The Secrets of Success.

A man's comfort in life depends very much upon his keeping a little ahead in his money affairs. If you once fall behind, it may be very difficult to make up the headway, which is lost. One who begins with putting aside some part of his earnings, however small, and keeps it up for a number of years, is likely to become rich before he dies. One who inherits property, and goes on year by year spending a little more than his income, will become poor if he lives long enough. Living beyond their means has brought multitudes of persons to ruin in our generation. It is the cause of nine-tenths of all the defalcations which have disgraced the age. Bankers and business men in general do not often help themselves to other people's money until their own funds begin to fall off, and their expenditures exceed their receipts. A man who is in debt walks in the midst of perils. Merchants who, in their prosperity, would have scorned the thought of anything approaching to fraud have, when they found themselves sinking, resorted to base devices which would seem to be utterly foreign to their nature. A drowning man will clutch at the throat of his best friend to save himself. Debt in itself is dreadfully demoralizing. It may sometimes be inevitable; but, even when there is no dishonesty connected with it, the moral fibre is liable to be injured by its influence. It cannot but impair one's self-respect when he feels that he is living upon money which belongs to others. How much better, whenever it is possible, to keep a little ahead, even though we deny ourselves all the luxuries and some of the comforts of existence.

It is also very desirable that we should keep somewhat ahead in our work. This may not be possible in all cases; as, for instance, when a man's work is assigned to certain fixed hours, like that of the operatives in a mill. But there are certain classes of people who can choose their time for the work which they are called to do, and amongst them there are some who invariably put off the task assigned them as long as possible, and then come to its performance hurried, perplexed, anxious, confused—in such a state of mind as certainly unfits them for doing their best work.

One secret of success in life consists in keeping ahead of other people in our plans. Society is divided into two classes—leaders and followers—those who "go ahead" and those who "fall into line." How are great fortunes made? Partly, as already said, by saving, and also by striking out in advance of others. A thing once done, it may be easy to copy and to multiply it; but it is the pioneer who went ahead and first broke the ground that deserves the praise. It is to men who open new paths, and disclose to us regions that were unknown before, that the world is most indebted.

It is the advanced idea of a few men in one generation which decides the destiny of the generation that follows. Society is always in need of men who command respect and reverence because of their elevated character. We look up to certain persons; we look down upon others; up or down—because of the monotonous level on which the multitude stand. If it were not for the example of a few eminent men, we should have a low standard of character. In every village of a thousand or more inhabitants there are usually some four or five men and women whose influence would be sadly missed if they should be taken away. They keep ahead of other people—in enterprise as well as in character. A handful of such persons may elevate the whole tone of the community. Alas for the town where all people are on a level! It is sure to be a pretty low level.

Let every young man who has a soul in him determine not only to get ahead, but to keep ahead till he drops out of his place to make way for some one else. In our day those who are coming on the stage of action find it particularly hard to get a start—the roads are blocked, there is a crowd of applicants for ever respectable station or opening, and it is only the active and vigilant who stand much chance of getting ahead. But remember for your comfort that those who have succeeded best are often such as had to strive hardest in the beginning.

What special advantage have the great majority of successful men had when they started in their career? Only such as they found within themselves—a clear head, an earnest purpose, and a strong will. They made their fortunes, fortune did not make them.

Fight your own battle in life. Ask no favors of any one, and you will succeed a thousand times better than those who are always beseeching patronage. No one will ever help you as you can help yourself, because no one can be so heartily interested in your welfare.

How to Take Life.

Take life like a man, says Spurgeon. Take it just as though it was—as it is—an earnest, vital, essential affair. Take it just as though you were born to the task of performing a merry part in it—as tho' the world had waited your coming. Take it as though it were a grand opportunity to achieve, to carry forward great and good schemes, to hold and to cheer a suffering, weary, it may be heart-broken, brother. The fact is, life is undervalued by a great majority of mankind. It is not made half as much of as should be the case. Where is the man or woman who accomplishes one tithe of what might be done. Who can not look back on opportunities lost and plans unachieved and thoughts crushed, all caused from lack of necessary and possible effort! If we knew better how to take and make the most of life, it would be greater than it is. Now and then a man stands aside from the crowd, labors earnestly, steadily, confidently, and straightway becomes famous for wisdom, intellect, skill, greatness of some sort. The world wonders, admires, idolizes; and yet it only illustrates what each may do if he takes hold of life with a purpose. If a man but say he will, and follow it up, there is nothing in reason he may not expect to accomplish.

A curious discovery was made at the Vernon House, on Clark street, at Newport, which was formerly the headquarters of Washington, Lafayette and Rochambeau. It became necessary to remove a large broad panel from over the fire place in one of the upstair rooms. Behind this panel was discovered an old fresco painted in oil on plaster, and measuring some three feet square. In one corner there are the figures of three beautiful females, one being dressed in red, with long hair flowing beneath a hat ornamented with plumes. In her hand she holds a mandolin. This group stands at the gate of a castle beyond which may be seen a cluster of houses with red-tiled roofs. Opposite is a turbaned negro holding two snow-white horses somewhat heavily harnessed. In the background is a gathering of Indians with long lances. The painting is bordered above by a strip of yellow, over which is a frieze of passion-flowers and sea-shells.

Motto to milk men—to the pure all things are pure.

Spring millinery bills are more somewhat larger this year than last.

The reflection of spring: a schoolboy is putting a bent pin in his teacher's chair.

Men are like wagons; they rattle prodigiously when there is nothing in them.

What is the difference between forms and ceremonies? You sit upon forms and stand upon ceremonies.

The ladies give as a reason for miarrying for money that they now seldom find anything else worth having.

Young men persist in hugging delusions, and that's the reason so many young ladies wear delusion shawls.

Some of the dry goods show windows are as interesting as a museum of anatomy. They show how fearfully and wonderfully people can be made.

No matter how finely a dentist's parlor is furnished, no one cares to take a seat in his drawing room. This is a good joke, but is tooth in to draw.

The word "dear" is one of the greatest inventions of the English language. Every married man can say "My dear wife," and no one can tell just exactly what he means.

The Chronicle says that a young lady of Vallejo is so modest that when she retires at night she puts a weight on the album containing the photographs of her gentleman friends.

Why is paper money more valuable than gold? When you put it in your pocket you double it, and when you take it out you find it still in creases.

"Jack, what relation are you to that old gentleman I saw you with this morning?" "Oh, not much; he's married to my grandmother's only daughter.

More than thirty-three professional baseball players are without engagements. Call this returning prosperity? Oh, the irony of the world!

Patrick having been told that Dr. Peters had found an asteroid, remarked: "Bedad, he may have his asteroid, but as for meself I prefer a horse for ride."

A beautiful answer was given by a little Scotch girl. When her class was examined, she replied to the question, "What is patience?" "Wait a wee, and dinna weary."

A man who began to read a paragraph about the manufacture of artificial diamonds the other day, dashed the paper down, saying he had enough of those blasted gem puzzles.

During leap year, the Detroit Free Press says, "Any wife is privileged to go down town after 10 o'clock and hunt up her husband and read him a lecture on larks and other birds."

Rather cold snap, remarked the fox, as he put his foot in the steel trap. We shall have an open spring, was all that the trapper vouchsafed, as he approached the animal.

A German lost his wife, and the next week married again, and his new wife asked him to take her out riding. He replied: "You dink I ride out mid anodder voman so soon after the death of mine frau!"

Some country editor who found difficulty in meeting the requirements of all his advertisers, said: "They probably will not have time to get Cleopatra's needle ashore here before advertisers will begin to quarrel to see who shall be at the top of the column."

It is nice when a wife gives her husband a box of cigars on his birthday, but it somehow takes the romance all out of it when she quietly observes next morning, "You'll have to give me some money to pay for those cigars; I spent all mine for other things.

A mother was trying to break her five-year-old boy of the habit of lying by telling him that all liars went to h—l. She gave him a moving account of the terrors of the place, whereupon he exclaimed, "Why, mother, I couldn't stand it." "But you would be made to stand it." "Oh, well" said the youngster, "if I could stand it I wouldn't care."

"No," exclaimed Mr. Penbecker. "No, madam, I object most decidedly. Once and for all I say it—the girls shall not be taught foreign languages." "And why not, pray?" said Mrs. P., with withering sarcasm. "Because," said Mr. P., with more withering sarcasm, "because, Mrs. P., one tongue is enough for any woman!"

A reward having been offered for a ryhme to Arkansaw, the Arkansas Traveler set its machine to work and ground out the following:

There is a young man here in Arkansaw,
Who can saw as much wood as his ma can saw:
But give him an ax,
And with one or two whacks,
He'll chop up more logs than his pa can saw

That certain insects possess a power akin to reason is illustrated by Gleditsch, a German naturalist, who relates that he one day spitted a toad on a stick which he fixed upright in the ground. The oder of the decaying reptile attracted a number of burying beetles; but as they found they could do nothing with the toad while in the air, they mined under the base of the stick until it fell, when they buried the toad and stick together. Such an engineering attempt would seem to indicate the presence of a definite purpose.

A writer in the Phrenological Journal admonishes parents to guard their children from the practice of snow eating, claiming that it has much to do with head colds of many girls and boys, because of the chilling effect of snow upon the palate or thin partition between the mouth and nostrils, producing congestion of the fine membrane which lines its upper surface. As this membrane is almost entirely constituted of delicate nerves and blood vessels, inflammation is likely to follow the congestion, and perhaps degeneration into nasal catarrh, an affection so common with persons in our northern latitudes.

THE OBSERVATIVE POWER OF WOMEN.—Women are of far more sensitive and nimble minds than men, and can better see through others. Their over suspicious nature often fancies things to be passing in those they are inspecting, but also often hits on what is really going on within our bosoms. They connect the attack with its cause; they see into the thicket where resentment is lurking. This clear-seeing of women has often astounded me—even of women little remarkable for abilities. It seemed as if their passions supplied force to their intellect and sharpened their wits. I have known a jealous woman actually to know what passed within the mind of her lover and her rival, as if she could see through their breasts to scan their thoughts and examine their designs.

How to Treat Brothers.

Girls, be kind to your brothers. Don't be afraid you will spoil them by showing them plenty of sisterly attention. They are tiresome chaps sometimes, consequential and overbearing, treating their sisters like inferior beings. But never mind that, girls; carry with you the two bears—bear and forbear. The consequential age generally passes off with the growth of the manliest mustache, and when, and manhood dawns upon them they will realize how gentle and kind their sisters have been. Make home pleasant to them; let them see and feel you enjoy their company sometimes equally as well as you do that of some other girl's brother. If you play or sing on the piano do your best for brother Will or Rob, or whatever his name may be, and reward him with a smile when he turns over your music or gives up his seat to you, just as you would any other gentleman. Lay aside your book or work to have a pleasant chat or innocent game with your brother; draw out of him with whom and where he spends his evenings outside of the family circle. Encourage him to speak of his associates. A sister often has more influence with a brother than a parent has. If he can confide in his sister regarding his friends and amusements, you need have no fear of how he spends his evenings away from home. Let him see that you take an interest in his studies or business. When he asks you to sew on a button or mend a glove, don't put on an agrieved air; do it cheerfully and willingly. He will reward you in his secret heart with a wealth of brotherly love, though he may not show it, for some think it unmanly to display affection. Treat his friends with politeness even if they are not your style. Throw all the safeguards you can around your young brothers, by sisterly love and forbearance. Try to make home the happiest and dearest place on earth.

Carp Growing.

Several marked advantages are claimed for the German carp for profitable cultivation. Any kind of a pond, no matter how restricted, can be used. Difficulties of temperature or purity of water are scarcely factors in carp culture. Providing the water is not too cold, carp thrive rapidly. In fact, no natural water has yet been found too warm for them. Being vegetable feeders, carp thrive on plants growing in the water, or may be given offal, like pigs, or boiled grain like chickens. A large pond may be dug on areble land, allowed to grow carp for two or three years, the fish marketed and the ground brought under cultivation again.

The profitableness of carp culture is shown by the following experience reported in a California paper. A gentleman in that state bought six carp in January, 1876. One of them soon died. From the other five he raised the first year 2,044 fish, and the year after 2,672. In 1878 he sold two of his old fish, and raised 4,000 from the remaining three. He had four shallow fish ponds, costing $50 each, and covering about half an acre of low ground comparatively worthless for other uses. For his original fish he paid $30, and $10 for food stuff, making a total outlay of $240. In four years he sold $415 dollars worth of fish, and had from 4,000 to 6,000 left, after supplying his own table with fish for eighteen months.

There are thousands of small ponds throughout the country which might with a little trouble be converted into carp ponds with large profit.

Gathering Ferns and Mosses.

Ferns are so beautiful and easily grown that all can afford to have them in their gardens or houses. They will grow where flowers will not; and the shadier and damper the ground is, the better.

A very pretty place for ferns to grow is in the old-fashioned wide fire-place, and they cover up an unsightly place in summer—and also give great pleasure in watching their fronds expand. A fern basket made in this way is both unique and pretty: Take splints made of kindling wood, fasten them an inch and a half apart around an old tin cover, and keep them in place by an iron hoop fitting snugly against the slats or splints inside, the cover rim being slightly indented to prevent the splints from moving laterally. The top is a wooden rim, to which the splints are attached. Line this with moss turf, with the green placed outward, and the basket filled with earth and less mold. The moss should also be extended over the top of the basket after setting out young ferns, which may be found in any of the damp, mossy parts of the woods. The basket when prepared should be kept somewhat shaded and the moss daily dampened.

The bottom and splints of the basket should be painted a bright red, contrasting with the green of vegetation, though such violent contrasts in flowers are not good.

When moss is not available, grass sods may be substituted for the basket lining, and other plants be substituted for the ferns. A peach basket or two, fastened together, serve the same purpose without the trouble of making the splint basket.

BEADS.—Notwithstanding the seeming insignificance of such trinkets as beads, their history reveals some very curious facts. For example, it shows that the lowest order of men had beads composed of wood and bones; and, as the race made progress toward civilization, there was a corresponding change in the style, character, and material of the ornaments. Also that there is no evidence that the prehistoric races of America had any method of making glass; yet in the mounds occasional glass beads are found, undoubtedly of Venetian manufacture, showing some connection between the continents anterior to the time of Amerigo Vespucci. Also that some of the beads found in Egypt and other localities, in connection with mummies, were made of jasper, carnelian, and garnet; and no knowledge has been transmitted to us how the hole could have been made through these exceedingly hard stones.

CURIOUS STATISTICS OF MARRIAGE.—It is found that young men from 15 to 20 years of age marry young women averaging two or three years older than themselves; but, if they delay marriage until they are 20 or 25 years old, their spouse averages a year younger than themselves; and henceforward this difference steadily increases, till in extreme old age, on the bridegroom's part, it is apt to be enormous. The inclination of octogenarians to wed misses in their teens is an every-day occurence, but it is amusing to find, in the love-matches of boys, that the statistics bear out the satires of Thackeray and Balzac.

Dr. C. C. Hiatt says: Twenty years' special practice with children has led me to test Rinehart's Worm Lozengers. I give them my unqualified endorsement. For sale at Wright's.

The Original Indians.

In an article in Potter's American Monthly Gen. Brisbin attempts to prove that the Indian is of Asiatic origin. In summing up his facts he says: "Perhaps the strongest proof that our Indians are from Asia is in the fact that the nomadic tribes of Alaska are related to the Kamtchatkas, and even now pass and repass Behring Straits. A tribe has lately been found in Alaska speaking the same language that is spoken in Kamtchatka; and still further, as if to remove all obstacles to the belief that the North American Indian is from Asia, I am assured many tribes on both sides of the straits are identical in manners, habits, and customs. While the geography of the western hemisphere was unknown, the origin of our Indians could not be otherwise than a matter of conjecture; but now that the locality of tribes and the characteristics of our country are known, we can with almost certainity establish the nativity of the Red Man. It is not within the scope of this article to enter into further particulars concerning this interesting subject, but I will remark that sixty-nine authorities examined all point to the same conclusion, and it can be satisfactorily proved our Indians are Asiatics: First, by their similarity of features and complexions. Second, by similarity of languages. Third, by similarity of religion. Fourth, by similarity of dress and ornaments. Fifth, by similarity of marriages. Sixth, by similarity of methods of making war. Seventh, by similarity of dances. Eighth, by similarity of sacrifices. Ninth, by similarity of funeral rites. Tenth, by similarity of festivals and beliefs concerning dreams. Eleventh, by similarity of games. Twelfth, by similarity of practice in naming children. Thirteenth, by similarity of dwellings. Fourteenth, by similarity in forms of government."

"Under the Weather."

How many people drag through life about half ill, never really sick, but always miserable and doing their work in a listless, reluctant way. It dulls the keen edge of pleasure and kills the zest of living. All this results from impure blood. A bottle of Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" will transform such sufferers into new creatures by cleansing the blood and toning up the system. Hundreds are now living healthy and happy lives who never knew a "well day" till they took Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy."

The Immortality of the Soul.

In the different ages there has been nothing about which the minds of men have been more agreed than in regard to these two things, the existence of a God, or Divine Ruler, and the existence in man of a soul that is to live forever. Like a ship from a far distant shore, that has traveled over boisterous seas and through storms which have sunken nearly all the other vessels that started from the same place at the same time, the belief in these two things has come down to us from the very cradle of the human race, over-riding and swerving the opposition it has encountered along the way. As a bow in the hands of the archer may be bent ever so much, and yet if not broken it will return to its former shape when the pressure is removed; as a ship may be driven from its course under the stress of a stormy wind, and yet if well handled and uninjured it will be brought back to the right course when the wind subsides; as the trees of the forest may be made to sway to and fro during a tempest, and yet when the commotion ceases they will resume their former positions; so the human mind under strong pressure or subtle argument may be shaken and made to sway from the right position for a time, and yet after a season, in calmer moments, when circumstances permit it to act wisely and naturally it will not fail to come back to a recognition of those truths which are supported by sufficient evidence. Thus it has been in the past in regard to the immortality of the soul, and thus doubtless it will be in the future. Under certain influences many may be led to doubt or to deny this important truth, and yet we may feel confident that the general course of human thought on this subject will always be in about the same direction, the deviations being slight and temporary.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

Charcoal and Its Uses.

Charcoal, laid flat while cold on a burn, causes the pain to abate immediately; by leaving it on for an hour the burn seems almost healed when the burn is superficial. And charcoal is valuable for many other purposes. Tainted meat, surrounded with it, is sweetened; strewn over heaps of decomposed pelts, or over dead animals, it prevents any unpleasant odor. Foul water is purified by it. It is a great disinfectant, and sweetens offensive air if placed in shallow trays around apartments. It is so very porous that it condenses gases most rapidly. One cubic inch of fresh charcoal will absorb nearly one hundred inches of gaseous ammonia. Charcoal forms an unrivaled poultice for malignant wounds and sores, often corroding away dead flesh, reducing it to one-quarter in six hours. In cases of what we call proud flesh it is invaluable. It gives no disagreeable odor, corrodes no metal, hurts no texture, injures no color, is a simple and safe sweetener and disinfectant. A teaspoonful of charcoal, in half a glass of water, often relieves a sick headache; it absorbs the gases and relieves the distended stomach pressing against the nerves, which extend from the stomach to the head. It often relieves constipation, pain, or heartburn.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has such a remedy, and its extensive and extensively merited success has secured the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

THE DEPARTED YEAR.

The year just closed will be remembered among the eventful ones of the century. In some respects it has been a good year and in some respects a bad one. A nation's life, like that of an individual, is composed of ups and downs, a combination of adversity and prosperity.

In its weather aspects the past year may truly be said to have been phenomenal. It began with a winter of extreme cold, which was prolonged into the spring months. The spring was late and the summer exceedingly hot and dry. The summer's drouth was followed by a warm and wet autumn, which extended to the very last days of the year. Although the great nations of the world have been at peace with each other, and no great wars have afflicted mankind, still the year has been noted for great crimes and appalling calamities. President Garfield of the United States and Czar Alexander of Russia have been stricken down by assassins. These crimes stand without a parallel in recent years and are wholly without excuse or palliation. Among the most shocking of the disasters which have occurred may be mentioned the burning of the theater at Nice, France, March 22d, in which one hundred people were burned; the burning of the ring theater at Vienna with a loss of six hundred and twenty lives; an earthquake at Scio on the Aegean Sea which killed seven thousand persons, injured ten thousand and left fifty thousand homeless; numerous hurricanes in the Western States, which destroyed whole villages and many lives; the fire in Quebec which destroyed eight hundred buildings; the forest fires in Michigan by which three hundred people were burned to death, fifteen thousand left homeless and two millions of property swept out of existence; a typhoon in China which laid low two thousand houses; and a railroad accident in Mexico killing over two hundred people.

Barring these accidents and calamities, and other smaller and similar ones, the people of the United States, at least, have cause to rejoice in an universal prosperity. In the field of business, trade and material progress this country has never seen so prosperous a year. Over nine thousand miles of new railroad have been constructed, an amount exceeding by two thousand miles that of any previous year, which was in 1871, and the 31st of December was commemorated by starting the first through trains from San Francisco and New Orleans over the Southern Pacific railroad. New manufacturing enterprises have sprung up all over the land, while those already established have increased their facilities and extended their lines of trade. The National and State Treasuries are overflowing with money, and all great business enterprises seem to be upon a safe and durable foundation. Just at this time there is a slight depression as merchants and manufacturers are posting their books for the year and settling outstanding accounts, preparatory to the business boom which seems likely to mark the year 1882.

The death-roll of the retiring year is a long and distinguished one. At the head of the list, in the estimation of every American heart, stands the name of President Garfield. The Earl of Beaconsfield, Prime Minister of England has been called home. In the field of politics may be mentioned Senators Carpenter of Wisconsin, and Burnside of Rhode Island, Congressman Fernando Wood of N. Y., Ex.Gov. Bagley of Michigan, and Gen. Leslie Coombs of Kentucky. In theology are Dean Stanley of Westminister, Bishop Atkinson of North Carolina, Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon of New Haven, and Bishop E. Q. Haven of the M. E. Church. Business circles have lost President Thos. A. Scott of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, W. G. Fargo president of the American Express Company, James Rothschild, a scion of the great banking house, Geo. Law the New York financier. There might be added as persona[illegible] renown, Sothern the actor, Adelaide Neilson the actress and Dr. I. [illegible]ayes the Arctic explorer.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

In the Field for 1884.

Cincinnati Enquirer: The announcement is made that "Mr. Tilden is evidently in the field for 1884." This is not altogether without probability.—The field is a very large one, and there is no law to keep Mr. Tilden out.

Such is Fame.

Denver Tribune: Once in a while the papers have something to say about William M. Evarts, the father of eleven daughters and the confidential adviser of the person who is now serving a term as road overseer at Fremont, Ohio.

Probably He Lied.

Cincinnati Enquirer: One of the most disgusting incidents of the trial of Guiteau was the assassin's announcement in the Court-room that he had had a merry Christmas, with lots of fruits and flowers and numerous calls from ladies. For the honor of American men and women, we hope Guiteau lied when he made this statement.

A Bright Prospect.

Cincinnati Star: The United States enters upon the new year with an exceedingly bright commercial and business prospect. Nearly every branch of business is unusually prosperous, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather of early winter, and the development of our vast resources—agricultural, industrial and mineral—goes on rapidly, with every indication of a steady and constant increase.

Let It Be Explained.

Detroit Free Press: No protectionist has yet been able to explain how the workingman was benefitted by the action of the steel rail companies of the United States in subsidizing the Vulcan Iron Works of St. Louis, by the payment of $70,000 a year to suspend operations in the rolling of steel rails. The effect of this was to curtail the market for labor, thus tending to reduce the rate of wages, while the diminished production and absence of additional competition tended to increase the price of a commodity protected by an exorbitant tariff.

Does He Tell All He Knows.

Cleveland Leader: Judge Reagan, at present member of Congress from Texas, and the last Secretary of the Treasury of the defunct Southern Confederacy, comes to the front with a denial that Jeff Davis, in his flight from Richmoud, took any large quantity of gold belonging to the Confederate government with him. He accounts for what was taken by saying that the specie was distributed among the soldiers at Charlotte, and the $600,000 in new Confederate notes were burned. Surely Reagan should know and probably does. The only question is, does he tell all he knows?

Close of the Atlanta Exposition.

New York Herald: The Cotton Exposition which has been in progress at Atlanta for three months was brought to a close yesterday. In its immediate results the enterprise has been a success. It attracted a quarter of a million people to Atlanta and was successful financially as well as from an industrial standpoint. But the greatest fruits of the fair are yet to come. The lessons and ideas that the South has received in industrial economy, and particularly what it has learned in the way of new inventions and processes relating to the culture and manufacture of its greatest staple, must lead to valuable results in the future, while the exhibition of its rich and varied resources cannot but prove the means of attracting needed Northern capital to Southern fields of investment. The South has entered upon a new era of industrial activity, and no little of its coming prosperity will be due to the Atlanta Exposition.

David Davis and the Ragged Newsboy.

Washington Star: Since the meeting of Congress in December Hon. David Davis, President pro tem. of the Senate, has been in the habit of purchasing the Star from a ragged little newsboy who sells papers about the Capitol. On Saturday last when the boy came with his papers, the Senator called a messenger and directed him to go down to the city and purchase him a new outfit from cap to boots, which was done. He then took the boy to the barber shop in the Capitol and directed the barber to cut his hair and give him a bath. When this was done he took the boy to his room and gave him some good fatherly advice, sending him away with an additional present in the way of small coin to spend Christmas. When the boy returned to his mother he was scarcely recognized in his metamorphose. The story leaked out through the barber, to the great disgust of the distinguished gentlemen who, as a friend remarked when this incident was related to him, "is constantly doing that sort of thing."

Quick and Sure.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves, when by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength quickly and surely coming back to them.

THE HERALD FOR 1882.

Again we greet the patrons of the Tecumseh HERALD with a friendly welcome, and present to them our plans for the coming year. The HERALD has become so well established in the territory where its circulation extends, and its character has become so well known, that an extended notice of our future aims and prospects seems unnecessary. Still our friends have a right to know what we purpose to do during the next twelve months, whether any important changes are on the tapis, what kind of a newspaper we design giving them, and upon what basis we wish to conduct the business department of the office.—The program which we have adopted for the guidance of the HERALD during the ensuing year may be more fully explained under two heads:—First, its editorial management; secondly, its business management.

In the editorial conduct of the paper the same general rules will guide us that have obtained in the office since the present proprietors took the helm. Our chief aim will be to make the HERALD a first-class LOCAL NEWSPAPER. We shall not attempt to compete with the New York and Chicago weeklies in the amount of general news and miscellaneous reading furnished, for our efforts in that direction would prove a failure, but in the field of local news, adapted to the wants and wishes of the residents of Northern Lenawee, we can and will compete with any other newspaper in existence. Increased attention will be given to county and state news.—Our corps of township correspondents will be enlarged and improved; in fact, the fruits of our policy in this direction are already apparent.—Special pains will be taken to give full reports of all public meetings of a general character held in Tecumseh or vicinity. The farmers will be remembered in the proceedings of Farmers' Clubs, and when the rush of holiday advertising is over a special page will be devoted to their interests. At the same time we shall not neglect the women and children, for a few columns of choice miscellany will be given each week for their instruction and edification. We shall also pay considerable attention to current matters of political interest, such as civil-service reform, the discussion of the tariff, etc. Our business is better systematized than ever befor and the better portion of one man's time will be regularly given hereafter to the editorial department of the office.

In our business management we shall make one or two important changes. In lieu of the premiums given in the former years, we shall expend the money heretofore used for that purpose on the newspaper itself, and thus furnish our patrons a better newspaper for the same yearly subscription. We have a few of last year's receipt books still on hand. These will be given to all advance paying subscribers for 1882 until the supply shall have been exhausted. We have also resolved to adopt the advance payment plan and rigidly adhere to it. There is no good reason why a man should not pay in advance for his copy of the Clinton News or Tecumseh HERALD or Adrian Times, exactly as he does for his New York World, or Detroit Tribune or Michigan Farmer. Country editors, no less than those living in the city, must buy bread and butter and fuel, pay rent, purchase stock, and hire workmen. These things cannot be accomplished without hard cash or currency with which to foot the bills. The old slipshod pay-as-you-please method works mischief both to publisher and subscriber. The publisher is deprived of funds which are legally and morally his due, and is thus forced to let his own debts run, to the wear and tear of his conscience and the detriment of his credit. The subscriber becomes heedless and careless about paying his bills and contracts bad business habits which may forever cripple his usefulness. This plan too compels prompt subscribers to carry the dilatory ones, and thus indirectly it places a premium upon negligence. We shall allow our friends a lee-way of one month in which to adapt themselves to the new regulation, but all subscriptions not credited in advance on or before the first of February next will be discontinued. We trust that the HERALD'S numerous family may be still further increased during 1882, and that the members thereof may all enjoy a happy and prosperous year.

Mr. Michael McCann, a well-known and popular manufacturer of Syracuse N. Y., writes: "I felt generally debilitated and my health failing me, I longed and prayed for an iron constitution, that I might be rid of the many annoyances of ill-health. But dyspepsia and urinary troubles, attended by nervous prostration, had gotton hold of me and I felt my time had come. Nothing seemed to give me any personal relief. Finally I happened to see an advertisement of Brown's Iron Bitters, 'Bless me,' says I, 'that's just the medicine for me precisely.' And so it was. By the powers of old Ireland, it has cured me of all my troubles and given me a constitution of iron."

Jefferson Fuller, of Morenci, caught an otter in Bean creek, which measured four feet in length.

"Bob" MILLER is probably the happiest man in town since the addition to his family.

THE installation of officers of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69, F. and A. M. took place last Friday evening.

WE received a card from J. B. Colrill of Philadelphia, that he arrived home all safe and sound and gets the HERALD regularly.

J. E. FESSENDEN, of Mt. Pleasant, arrived last Saturday upon the sad errand of bringing his father's remains here for burial. He returned on Tuesday

WE learn that the millinery establishment of Hein H. Sission of Brooklyn was burned last Tuesday night, but we have not been able to learn the particulars.

THE Council has purchased a team for the fire engine and a splendid one too, a beautiful span of bays weighing 2710 lbs. and not 10 pounds differenee in their weight.

HIRAM SHERMAN, one of our old and respected citizens, died last Monday night, after an illness of only three days' duration. An obituary notice will appear next week.

MRS. DR. HOUSE was relieved from her earthly sufferings last evening. She has been in a critical condition for several weeks, and for the past few days her demise has been hourly expected. The funeral services will be held at half past two o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

THE Presbyterian Society will hold services at the Opera House next Sunday morning and evening at the usual hour, on account of repairing the furnaces in the church. The preparatory lecture and communion will be postponed until the return to the church. By order of Committee.

OUR readers will be furnished with plenty of reading matter hereafter, our rush of holiday advertising having blown over. If there is a paper in Southern Michigan that furnishes more columns of reading than the HERALD does this week, we should like to know the name of it.

WM. HAYDEN has decided to remove his stove factory to Milan. He will find it a good location for buying bolts in large quantities very cheap. The people of Milan can congratulate themselves upon this acquisition to their business interests. They will find Mr. Hayden a go-ahead business man.

THE lecture by Geo. W. Bain of Kentucky, at the Opera House last evening was a masterly effort. His subject was "From New York to the Golden Gate." Good judges say it was one of the finest lectures ever given in Tecumseh. Those who attended belong to the fortunate crowd this time.

THERE are two reasons why the dramatic entertainment to be held at the opera house on Tuesday evening next week should be well patronized. First, it will be a fine entertainment of itself at the modest fee of only 25 cts. Secondly, the proceeds will go to replenish the treasury of the fire department, which is a very worthy object. Let the house be packed.

ON Tuesday evening of next week Jan. 10th, an amateur company will present at the Opera House those two first-class plays, entitled Stand by the Flag and a Conjugal Lesson. The cast of characters is a splendid one, and the proceeds will be for the benefit of the Tecumseh Fire Department. Both plays are now in rehearsal. Let us give the boys a rousing benefit. Admission only 25 cents.

Red Lips and Rosy Cheeks.

Wheeling, W. Va. May 30, 1881.

I am an old physician, and have lost many of my youthful prejudices. Learning of the great good done by a certain remedy in restoring to robust health a former patient of mine who suffered severely from several chronic ailments resulting from weak pulmonary digestive and arbitrary organs, and whom I was unable to benefit with my most careful treatment, I determined to prescribe it. I have done so, and the results have invariably been most satisfactory. Under its use the blood becomes richer, the digestive urinary and pulmonary organs are made strong, and perform their natural functions readily and without pain; all decay seems to be immediately checked and the progress of the disease arrested; the pulse becomes fuller and stronger, the lips red and the cheeks rosy, the temperature increased and more uniform the action of the heart regular, and the muscular strength greatly invigorated. In justice to the inventors, I will say this remedy is Brown's Iron Bitters; it is a preparation of iron and vegetable tonics; contains no alcohol, and is the only preparation of iron in a perfectly assimilable form and that does not blacken the teeth. I have never known it to fail to give permanent strength to every part of the body or to injure the most delicate constitution. I have known it to assist in curing many chronic diseases when all other remedies had failed.—M. D.

Auction Sale.

Hessel Scofield, administrator of the estate of E. G. Scofield, will sell at auction at the premises 1½ miles south of the village of Tecumseh, on Wednesday, Jan. 11, 1882, at 12 o'clock, M. the following property: Brown mare, iron gray horse, 2 milch cows, lumber platform spring wagon, long sleigh, heavy double harness, light harness, sulky cultivator, 3-tooth cultivator, plow, 40-tooth drag, corn drag, corn sheller, cutting box, wheelbarrow, swill cart, 2 tons of timothy hay, 250 bushels of corn in the ear, set of Fairbank's scales, forks, crowbar, iron vice, carpenter tools, grind stone, horse blankets, buffalo robe, 15 hens, 16 acres wheat on the ground, crosscut saw, scythe, cradle, sewing machine and a large assortment of household furniture. Usual terms of sale. Ben. Reynolds, auctioneer.

THE St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette has the following item. News travels a good ways from home sometimes:

The trustees of Tecumseh, Mich., passed an ordinance forbidding men and boys to loiter within fifty feet of a church door. This was intended to stop the practice of waiting at the vestibule for the girls to come out, numerous squabbles over the prizes having occurred. The spectacle of the eager beaux standing on the prescribed line like a lot of soliciting hackmen, is said to be rather ludicrous.

The Results of Necessity.

What the ancients suffered for the want of knowledge in medical science can only be appreciated by contrasting the vast amount of suffering cured and pain alleviated in modern times, by the use of Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases. Its introduction was characterized by the necessary withdrawel of a score or more of illusive, quack nostrums, whose evil effects have left living monuments to denounce them. Thus is exemplified the proverb, Necessity is the mother of Invention.

The Queen of England's Crown.

This was made by Messrs. Rundle & Bridge in 1838, with jewels taken from the old crowns, and others furnished by the command of her majesty. It consists of diamonds, pearls, rubies, sapphires and emeralds, set in silver and gold; it has a crimson velvet cap with an ermine border, and lined with white silk. Its gross weight is 39 oz. 6 dwt. troy. The lower part of the band above the ermine border consists of a row of 129 pearls, and the upper part of the band of a row of 112 pearls, between which, in front of the crown, is a large sapphire (partly drilled), purchased for the crown by his majesty, King George IV. At the back is a sapphire of smaller size, and six other sapphires (three on a side) between which are 8 emeralds. Above and below the 7 sapphires are 14 diamonds, and around the 8 emeralds 128 diamonds. Between the emeralds and the sapphires are 16 trefoil ornaments, containing 160 diamonds. Above the band are 8 sapphires surmounted by 8 diamonds, between which are 8 festoons consisting of 148 diamonds. In the front of the crown, and in the centre of a diamond Maltese cross, is the famous ruby said to have been given to Edward, prince of Wales, son of Edward III, called the Black Prince, by Don Pedro, king of Castile, after the battle of Najera, near Vittoria, A. D. 1367. This ruby was worn in the helmet of Henry V at the battle of Agincourt, A. D. 1415. It is pierced quite through, after the Eastern custom, the upper part of the piercing being filled by a small ruby.

Around this ruby, in order to form the cross, are 75 brilliant diamonds. Three other Maltese crosses, forming the two sides and back of the crown, have emerald centres, and contain respectively 132, 124 and 130 brilliant diamonds. Form the Maltese crosses issue four imperial arches composed of oak leaves and acorns; the leaves contain 728 rose, table and brilliant diamonds; pearls form the acorns, set in cups containing 45 rose diamonds and one table diamond. The total number of diamonds in the arches and acorns is 108 brilliant, 166 table and 559 rose diamonds. From the upper part of the arches are suspended four large pear-shaped pearls with rose diamond caps, containing 12 rose diamonds and stems containing 24 very small rose diamonds. Above the arch stands the mound, containing in the lower hemisphere 304 brilliants, and in the upper 224 brilliants, the zone and are being composed of 33 rose diamonds. The cross on the summit has a rose-cut sapphire in the centre, surrounded by 4 large brilliants and 108 smaller ones.

Unhealthy Literature.

That the country is flooded with novels of a most pernicious nature, is a fact which no observant person may deny. That the country would not be flooded with them if they were not encouraged, is another fact too evident to need proof. How, then, in the face of these two facts, can we account for this morbid curiosity on the part of so many members of the community?

Some novel readers tell us that they peruse those works simply to acquire style in writing; but all are aware that to read immoral works for the purpose of forming a person's style, is a very lame excuse. Writings that dress vice in the garb of dignity, or in any manner palliate or conceal its natural hideousness, can answer no other purpose than to weaken the influence of virtue and promote the cause of dishonesty and crime. Writings that attempt such a purpose, are so many efforts to counteract and destroy whatever is salutary in religion, government, and laws.

Those writers who would demoralize the lower orders of society, by persuading them that the institutions of religion and law, which protect every man in the possession of his own, are unsanctioned by the dictates of justice or the promptings of sound reason, are the most mischievous pests of literature. They would render the noblest of arts—that of printing—subservient to the destruction of sound morals and social happiness. The works of such writers, no matter what talent they may display, nor how fashionable soever may be their name, ought not to be purchased by any virtuous person. Nay, more, to afford praise to genius when it is perverted, or to wit when it is misemployed, is censurable—for, in any way to encourage wickedness is to partake of its guilt. If society suffers by the dissemination of vicious principles, it is a poor apology for the promoters thereof to allege that they do so, not from approbation of the principles, but from the admiration of the dress in which they appear, as poison were the less deadly because it is offered in a golden cup.

Origin of the Postage Stamp.

Quite an interesting and curious story is connected with the origin of the postage stamp. One day a girl came forth from an inn located in the northern part of England, and received from a postman a letter, which she turned over in her hand as she inquired the price of the postage. The man asked a shilling, a sum to large for one so poor as herself to pay, and so she returned the letter to the postman with sadness, although she knew that her brother had sent it. But a sympathetic traveler named Rowland Hill stood near, and at this moment interposed and insisted on paying the shilling himself, although the girl seemed strongly averse to his doing so. When the postman had departed, the kind-hearted Mr. Hill was surprised to find that there was no need for his pity; for the envelope, the young girl explained to him, contained no written communication, but on its outside were certain marks agreed upon by herself and brother, from which, as she held the letter in her hands, she gathered all the information she desired. "We are so poor," she continued, "that we invented this mode of correspondence without paying for our letters."

Such duplicity set Mr. Hill thinking that a postal system which incited people to commit petty fraud must be very defective. He argued that if the price of postage was lowered from an exorbitant rate to one that came easily within the means of the mass of the people, so many more letters would pass through the mails that the financial condition of the Treasury would not be impaired, while society would derive much additional benefit. He became so interested in the matter that he managed to bring his views to the notice of the British Government, which gave them a favorable reception; and on January 10, 1840, which may be considered the birthday of the postage stamp, letters began to be circulated in every part of the United Kingdom at the postage rate of only a penny. Rowland Hill became Secretary to the Postmaster General, and during the next ten years so great a change had taken place that in 1850 the number of letters sent through the mails was 7,239,962, against 1,500,000 in 1840.

We write our mercies in the dust; but afflictions we engrave in marble. Our memories serve us but too well to remember the latter, but we are strangely forgetful of the former.

Whortleberries—Blueberries.

I have been much interested in the articles in the Ploughman, says a correspondent, in regard to the cultivation of the whortleberry, and will give you my experience in that line, as I think it a berry well worth a place in our fruit gardens. Some six or eight years since I brought from a town in Worchester county, (where I dug them in a pasture, taking up as much soil with the roots as possible), two bushes of what are called there "half-high blueberries." I planted them in a rather moist spot in my garden, and awaited developments. That was in the spring. That season and the next I got but few berries, but since then they have been full every year, and from one which is about three feet high and about the same across the top, we have probably picked this season as many as four quarts of nice large berries, which are much better than any we can buy. The other bush seems to be of a different variety; the bush being somewhat taller but not so spreading, and the berries of a darker color and much smaller. I find that there is the same difference in the uncultivated berries, bushes growing side by side, so closely as to touch, producing berries of different colors and sizes.

I do not see that the common garden cultivation that I have given mine has made very much difference in the size of the fruit, and think it important that those bushes which bear large berries, should be selected for transplanting.

Good Advice to Grocers.

If there is any business that requires scrupulous cleanness it should be that of the retail grocer. He handles our sugar, he dishes out our butter, he weighs our meat, he fingers our bread, he touches our food at every turn. He needs clean hands and clean vessels. Put up those dirty scales; it makes one sick to see butter put into such a dingy tin pan. Cleanse your sugar scoop; scrape off that meat block; wipe out that cheese safe. Get broom and dusting brush; learn their use and keep them busy. Look at those fly specks! See where the molasses has trickled down and candied into a solid cake; scour it up. See where the flour has spilled and drifted into heaps around your barrels; sweep it away. Pick out those rotten vegetables that taint the air with their poisonous stench. Fling away those sickly, tough, shriveled beets. Out with those eggs that are slightly indisposed. Get hot soap-suds and wash down your counters. Hunt the rat-holes and plug them up or nail tin strips over them. Rake down the cobwebs that dangle in the corners. Polish up your tin and brass vessels. Wash your show windows daily. Dust those venerable canned goods that adorn your shelves. Remove the fly paper overhead. Get paint for your shelves and whitewash your walls. Keep clean, for soap is cheap, water is plenty, brooms are handy, and dirt don't pay. John Wesley says, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." Amen!—Ex.

The Diaphoto.

This is the name of another wonderful discovery of the 19th century, by means of which people can see by telegraph. What next?

The instrument consists of a receiving mirror, the wires, a battery, and a reproducing speculum. The receiving mirror is an amalagm of selenium and iodide of silver; the reproducing speculum is a compound of selenium and chromium. The wires are numerous, as it is necessary to distinctness that a wire should not be required to affect but a very small space. The instrument also has a mirror six inches by four, composed of seventy-two small plates, to each of which a wire is attached, the whole being wrapped by a fine insulated covering. These wires run to a common galvanic battery, and thus connect with the reproducing plate. When the circuit is closed, the rays of light are conducted through an ordinary camera, and the accompanying heat produces chemical changes in the amalgam of the mirror, which, modifying the electric current, cause similar changes in the reproducing speculum. The invention is looked upon as one of the most wonderful of the present day.

A cheap method of constructing a green-house is thus described. Dig out a pit in a side hill, where the upper end will be just above ground and the lower end will be two or three feet above ground, where the door must be, with two or three steps down for an entrance. Wall up, roof the wall, and cover the whole with sash as in hotbeds, the sash having more fall, say three feet in a width of two, the house being fifteen by ten. Erect in this the stand of shelves, and when it is time to take up the summer flowers, bulbs, etc., store them here. The glass should be covered with a thick straw mat, which can be removed even when the weather is coldest, in clear weather, for an hour or two at midday, to get the warmth and influence of the sun. At such times ventilation should also be attended to, by slightly opening a sash or two. No fire is needed. Nearly all readily flowering plants will bloom, and there will scarcely be a week during the winter that a bouquet may not be gathered, if the house is properly managed.

Natural Curiosities of Nevada.

Fifteen miles north of Lovelock station, Nevada, there is a petrified tree 600 feet in length and two feet thick. Its branches are still perfect. The tree is lying on the surface of the ground, and is petrified through from bark to core. Clarence King, the geologist, pronounced it "one of the greatest natural curiosities he had ever seen." Mr. Lovelock says he recently stumbled across a petrified rattlesnake in the vicinity of his ranch. The serpent's head was gone, but his body and rattles were whole. The rattles gave out a metallic sound, when shaken, like the ringing of a bell. The body of the snake is as hard as a rock.

The Iowa Central railroad has posted in its passenger coaches the following notice: "Every tobacco-chewing gentleman will have the gallantry to keep the ladies' coach clean, by riding in the forward car while chewing."

Washington Society in Jackson's Time.

In former years, the wildest gentlemen used to spend their evenings in decorously playing whist, with frugal suppers of broiled oysters, bread and cheese, and a glass or two of madeira. The rollicking Jackson men substituted poker for whist, and indulged in frequent libations of whisky, while their supper tables were graced—according to the season—with a baked raccoon, garnished with fried sweet potatoes, or canvas-back ducks, or shad broiled before a hickory fire on an oak board. Plantation tobacco was freely smoked in pipes, but few, except the members of the diplomatic corps, indulged in cigars.

Assemblies were held once a week between Christmas Day and Ash Wednesday, to which all the respectable ladies in the city who danced were invited. It was also customary for those of the Cabinet officers and other high officials who kept house to give at least one evening party during each session of Congress, invitations for which were issued. The guests at these parties used to assemble at about 8 o'clock, and after taking off their wraps in an upper room they descended to the parlor, where the host and hostess received them. The older men then went to the punch-bowl, to criticise the "brew" which it contained, while the young people found their way to the dining-room, almost invariably devoted to dancing. The music was a piano and two violins, and one of the musicians called the figures for the cotillons and contra dances. Those who did not dance elbowed their way through the crowd, conversing with acquaintances, and the men frequently taking another glass of punch.

At 10 the guests were invited to the supper table, which was often on the wide back porch, which every Washington house had in those days. The table was always loaded with evidences of the culinary skill of the lady of the house. There was a roast ham at one end, a saddle of venison or mutton at the other, and some roasted poultry or wild ducks midway; a great variety of home-baked cake was a source of pride, and there was never any lack of punch with decanters of maderia. The diplomats gave champagne, but it was seldom seen except at the legations. At 11 there was a general exodus, and after the usual scramble for hats, cloaks and overshoes the guests entered their carriages. Sometimes a few intimate friends of the hostess lingered to enjoy a contra dance or to take a parting drink of punch, but by midnight the last guest departed, and the servants began to blow out the candles with which the house had been illuminated.

Victoria and Albert.

When the august pair were first married, although the match was one of love, at least on the Queen's part, her Majesty could not always control her temper, and on the occasion of one of those trifling quarrels which occur in the best regulated families she threw a tea-cup at the Prince's head. He, excessively indignant, retired to his apartments and locked the door.

The Queen's anger having somewhat abated, she thought him sufficiently punished and knocked at his door. To the question "Who's there?" she replied in imperious tones, "The Queen." Prince Albert did not answer, and she went away. By and by she thought she would try again, and to the "Who's there?" answered "Victoria." Again there was complete silence, and she again retired. With the perseverance characteristic of a woman alarmed at the trouble to come, she determined to try a third time; and in response to the "Who's there?" replied sobbingly, "Your own loving wife." This brought Prince Albert to terms, and peace was re-established. It is said there was no more tea-cup throwing in the happy family.

Yet Victoria always remained an exacting wife, and never allowed her spouse what is bourgeoisement known as a latch-key. As the Prince presided at many public dinners, it was often close to midnight before he could possibly reach Windsor, and he had accordingly always a storm to face for "keeping late hours." Finally, the Queen ordered the castle gates to be closed at 10 P. M., and the now much monumented husband was locked out if he happened to be behind time.

Prince Albert was thoroughly stingy and was cordially disliked by the servants of the royal household. He ruthlessly abolished the perquisites which, from long custom, they considered themselves entitled to, and went so far as to confiscate the money they received by disposition of the ends of the wax candles used to illuminate the hall and concert rooms. Even in the houses of the smaller gentry the servants are accustomed to refresh with cold meat and beer any of their friends or the tradesmen calling through the day. At Buckingham Palace this custom prevailed. This, however, was too much for the Prince's German ideas of frugality, and he ordered the servants to be placed on board wages so that any hospatality they wished to offer their friends had to be paid for out of their own pockets. Little wonder, then, that when he died the grief in the servants' hall was not uncontrollable.—London Hour.

One of the young men from Milford sat down the other day and wrote on the back of a couple of postal cards, then turned them over and directed them, but by some mischance placed the address on the wrong cards. The result was the shirt manufactory in New York got a polite invitation to go carriage riding somewhere on the Milford pike, while the young man's girl was made frantic by receiving the following: "Please send me sample of the stuff your shirts are made of."

The Edible Sea Worm.

There is a curious food product obtained in the Pacific, which is esteemed as highly as are whitebait in England; it is a small species of sea worm, a genus of annelids, known scientifically as Palolo viridis. These worms are found in some parts of Samoa (Navigators' Islands) in the South Pacific Ocean. They come regularly in the months of October and November, during portions of two days in each month, namely, the day before and the day on which the moon is in her last quarter. They appear in much greater numbers on the second than on the first day of their rising, and are only observed for two or three hours in the early part of each morning of their appearance. At the first dawn of day they may be felt by the hand swimming on the surface of the water, and as the day advances their numbers increase, so that by the time the sun has risen, thousands may be observed in a very small space, sporting merrily during their short visit to the surface of the ocean. On the second day they appear at the same time and in a similar manner, but in such countless myriads that the surface of the ocean is covered with them to a considerable extent.

On each day, after sporting for an hour or two, they disappear until the next season, and not one is ever observed during the intervening time. They are found only in certain parts of the islands, generally in the openings of the reefs on portions of the coast where much fresh water is found; but this is not always the case. In size they may be compared to a very fine straw, and are of various colors and lengths, green, brown, white, and speckled, and in appearance and mode of swimming resemble very small snakes. They are very brittle, and if broken into many pieces, each swims off as if it were an entire worm. The natives are exceedingly fond of them, and calculate with great exactness the time of their appearance, and look forward to it with great interest. The worms are caught in small baskets, beautifully made, and when taken on shore are tied up in leaves in small bundles and baked. Great quantities are eaten undressed, but either dressed or undressed they are esteemed a great delicacy. Such is the desire to eat "palolo" by all classes that immediately the fishing parties reach the shore, messengers are dispatched in all directions with large quantities to parts of the island in which none appear.

Many of the European residents in the Fijis eat the "palolo" and look on it as quite a periodical relish. It also makes its appearance in the New Hebrides, in Tongo, and in the Samoan or Navigator Islands identically with its advent in Fiji.—Scientific American.

The Red Mask.

You have seen persons afflicted with Erysipelas? Well, it is an awful thing. It disfigures the face almost beyond recognition, and is as dangerous as it is repulsive. It often causes sudden death, and is sometimes called "St. Anthony's Fire." Mr. S. B. Carpenter, of Grandville, N. Y., had it in both legs, and was cured by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." His health is now perfect.—Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is the very life of the blood.

It is a Mad World.

A strictly authentic story comes from the Elmira Free Press at first hand from the university town. The Rev. Dr. Wisner, of sacred memory, long pastor of the Presbyterian church, was called upon by a wandering Baptist divine, who complained that he was denied access to the pulpit of his own order in that town. The Doctor kindly invited him to officiate in his open communion pulpit at an evening service, whereat the immersionist brother took his usual course, which was, he said, to find his text when he was ready to preach the sermon, and by the help of the Spirit provide then and there three divisions or heads for it.

He chanced to open on this occasion at the scripture which contains the verse, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made." The last letter, being at the end of the printed line, was hidden in the binding, and the preacher read the text with the omission.

"My brethren," said he, "this is a peculiar passage. I don't know as I ever read it before. But it is in the sacred word, and must have some valuable lessons for our meditation. "I am fearfully and wonderfully mad," says David, in this portion of the holy writ.

"And first we learn that it is possible for a saint to be mad."

"And second, that even a holy man may be fearfully and wonderfully mad."

Then, after scratching his head repeatedly for his third division, it came out thus:

"And we are led to remark in the third place that a good man, fearfully and wonderfully mad, is a very peculiar creature."

Do Not be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and that will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at Skilled Workmen in Demand.

In nearly every branch of useful industry the supply of skilled workmen is unequal to the demand. From one cause and another, comparatively few serve the needed apprenticeship to trades necessary to produce finished workmen. The result is to crowd our workshops with poor mechanics. And one evil of trades unions is that they make no distinction between good workmen and botches.

In our day very few boys are "bound" to serve a sufficient time to acquire a proper knowledge of thir etrades. Occupations requiring five or seven years to master are picked up in half the time, and so soon as a half-taught apprentice can secure a membership he sets himself up as a journeyman, demanding journeymen's wages, although he may have mastered no more than the rudiments of his trade. This system works evil all round, and employers and parents should unite to break it up.

Another error needing attention is the too common notion that it is degrading to learn a trade. A profession, a clerkship—something neat, easy and "genteel"—is sought rather than honest, useful toil. This is all wrong, and the sooner it comes to be understood the better will it be for our boys and for the country.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The board of supervisors convened for the December session at Dean's opera house at 2 o'clock, on Monday afternoon, Dec. 26, Supervisor Warren in the chair, and a quorum present, the members failing to respond to roll call: Messrs. Bixby, Swaney, Howell, Luke and Parsons.

A motion that all accounts be referred to committee on claims, was carried.

The chairman remarked that the regular order of business would not be taken up that afternoon.

The clerk read a communication from circuit court stenographer Harrison, in regard to an account which he had submitted to the board at its last session. Referred to the committee on claims.

Another communication relating to drains and drain commissioners, was read by the clerk, and referred to the drain committee.

TUESDAY'S SESSION.

Pursuant to adjournment, the board met in Dean's opera house, shortly after nine o'clock, and the roll call showed a quorum present.

Supervisor Hill, of Palmyra, reported the grievance of S. H. Goff, who claims that he has been unjustly taxed on drain No. 10, as the drain does no more good than before it was established. Referred to committee on drains.

A discussion took place, upon the question who was authorized to draw orders for the payment of work done on drains, previous to the appointment of Commissioner G. W. Westerman. Mr. Dewey, of Cambridge, finally offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted at the October session of the board of supervisors, in regard to the drawing and issuing of orders for drain purposes, shall be and is hereby amended so as to authorize the chairman and clerk of this board to make and issue drain orders for jobs, surveying, or labor done under the jurisdiction of Geo. W. Westerman, or any county drain commissioner prior to him (Westerman,) that is supported by a legal and just claim by the statute and the resolution of this board of supervisors.

The resolution was adopted, and on motion of Mr. Knapp, the board at half past ten, adjourned till two o'clock in the afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At two o'clock the roll call revealed only Messrs. Burger, Baker, Lowe and Parsons as the absentees.

Under the third order, motions and resolutions, Sup. Wilson, of Seneca, offered the following:

WHEREAS, In the year A.D., 1877, on Oct. 9 of said year, a tax was spread and collected on drain No. 83, in the township of Seneca, to the amount of $171.58, in full for construction and expenses on said drain No. 83; and

WHEREAS, An additional tax has been levied upon the same drain for the year A.D. 1881, to the amount of $70, without any just ground for levying the same.

Resolved, therefore, That the township treasurer of the said town of Seneca be instructed to omit the collecting of such drain tax as is spread upon the assessment roll for the year 1881, so far as it relates to drain No. 83, in the township of Seneca.

A remonstrance from citizens of Ridgeway, against collecting taxes on drain No. 95, or Big Swamp Raisin; and a grievance from Nathan Ganun, in regard to drain No. 236, were presented and referred to the judiciary committee.

Sup. Hill reported back sixty-five claims for jury and witness fees, etc. Accepted, placed on file, and orders drawn for the amounts.

At half-past three a motion to adjourn till Wednesday, at 9 A. M., was made by Sup. Hill and carried.

WEDNESDAY'S SESSION.

Sup. Wagener, of the committee on claims, reported back a number of claims for sundry services. Report accepted and adopted.

Sup. Wagener, from a special committee appointed last June for the purpose of auditing and revising claims for criminal fees, submitted a revised schedule.

Sup. Dewey moved the report be accepted and adopted.

Sup. Swaney called attention to the item allowing the sheriff only fifty cents per day for the care and board of prisoners. He thought the sheriff should have more compensation at present, as provisions were higher, and moved that it be amended by making it sixty instead of fifty cents per day.

After discussion, Sup. Swaney's amendment prevailed, and the amended bill was also passed.

Sup. Dreher, chairman of the drain committee, made his report which was accepted and adopted.

Sup. James offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the clerk be and is hereby authorized to draw his receipt for two hundred and fifty dollars ($250,) on the county treasurer for deputy county clerk's salary, to be drawn in regular monthly installments, at the close of each month; and the treasurer is hereby authorized to pay the same from the contingent fund of the county.

Resolved, That the clerk and treasurer be and is hereby authorized to contract with a suitable person to act as night watch at the county offices building for the ensuing year at a salary, of $40 per month; said night watch to be under the instruction of said clerk and treasurer, that they have the power to remove for neglect of duty or for any other cause, and report the same to this board.

The resolution was carried.

Sup. Wagener reported back sixty-five claims for jury and witness fees, medical service, etc. Accepted and adopted.

Sup. Dewey, of the judiciary committee, reported back the grievance of the Ridgeway parties, in regard to tax on drains, with the recommendation that part of the taxes on seven descriptions of land be omitted.

The report was accepted and adopted.

Such treatment to cover 1st, the city poor; 2, necessary aid at county jail; 3d, at the county poor house; Provided, Such superintendents shall have power to reject the bids of any party who in their judgment, is irresponsible or not qualified; And provided further, Such superintendents may let the contracts for all of said three contracts to the same party or only one to the same party as they may deem best.

The following resolution by Sup. Pratt was also adopted.

Resolved, That a special committee of three be appointed to see by what authority justices of the peace of the city of Adrian have returned the fines collected for the primary school library fund to the city collector, instead of the county treasurer, as provided by law.

On motion of Sup. Harkness, the board adjourned until the March session.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

GUITEAU'S TRIAL.

The cross-examination of Dr. McDonald was resumed by Mr. Scoville on Wednesday. The witness said he believed the prisoner while in court had feigned what he supposed was insanity; that the prisoner to the extent of his ability had attempted to appear insane. Continuing the act of Guiteau in threatening his sister with an ax, witness said it was the strongest evidence of insanity presented if true; but the prisoner had contradicted it. Guiteau interrupted the examination and declared anew that Scoville was making a fool of himself, and that the story of the ax was pure fiction. He wanted McDonald to tell something about Abraham and then leave the stand. McDonald was further questioned about religious delusions and the interview in the jail. Of the latter he said that he had not made memoranda. He then left the stand.

Dr. Barksdale, of Virginia, and Dr. Callendar, of Tennessee, both experts in insanity, swore that in their opinion Guiteau was sane, and pretending insanity in court. Their testimony was very damaging to the defense, if it can be said that there is any defense.

In the cross-examination of Callendar Scoville asked if the prisoner's claim of partnership with Jesus Christ in projecting the murder was not an indication of insanity.

"If your honor please," interrupted Porter, "I object to that question as irreverent and blasphemous."

"Well," said Scoville, apparently astounded at the nature of the objection, "if the prisoner's belief that he was inspired is irreverent and blasphemous, and the court rejects it on that ground, it puts an end to the case, because then we are not permitted to make any defense."

Judge Porter arose slowly from his seat, adjusted his eye glasses carefully, and in his impressive manner said: "There is no evidence, even on the oath of the criminal himself."

"How to you know that," shouted Guiteau, "you great big-mouthed Porter, you?"

Porter continuing, said: "There is no evidence that he believed the Redeemer of mankind to be his partner in the business, and when the learned counsel of the prisoner puts such a question in a Christian court and federal tribunal, I hold, whatever your honor may hold, that it is time to rebuke him and his client. The hypothesis that this man, who believes that God and Christ are his partners, should come in this court of justice, and before this audience and proclaim it, is preposterous."

"What do you know about it, you ass?" hissed the assassin.

"If it was before your honor in your private chamber," proceeded Porter in a solemn, sepulchral voice, "you would do in regard to counsel what you have not done in regard to the prisoner. The time has come when, in behalf of the American government, I should protest against blasphemous utterances. Counsel can predicate his questions upon facts which have been proved, but not upon those which assume that we make no distinction between the Redeemer of mankind and ourselves."

"How about Christ and St. Paul?" bawled Guiteau, whose face had become livid with excitement. "Haven't I as good a right to claim inspiration as St. Paul?"

The court commanded the assassin to keep still, and one of the guards tapped him on the shoulder reprovingly. He turned round sharply and told the man he would slap him in the face.

"I must insist," said Porter, "on behalf of the government that the criminal be remanded to the dock forthwith."

"You had better mind your own business," shrieked Guiteau.

"That's my business," said Porter, resuming his dramatic manner. "My motion to that effect is in abeyance and on the question of blasphemy with which this court has been filled from the beginning of the trial until now——"

"It was the truth, and not blasphemy," howled the prisoner, fairly foaming with rage.

"This blasphemy," continued Porter, "shall now be heard from the dock, and not from the counsel table. There is not a man at the American bar who would not have been silenced long ago had he uttered what that man, under pretense of being his own counsel, has uttered from time to time on a question which touches the hearts and consciences of the people of this nation. I now invoke your honor's decision in regard to the disposition of the prisoner."

"It is not worth your honor's attention," cried Guiteau.

"We are ready to enter upon that question," said Corkhill.

"Does the prosecution wish to say anything?" asked the court.

"I wish to speak very briefly on the motion," said Davidge, in a slow, deliberate manner. "Yesterday was the commencement of the seventh week of the trial of the prisoner for the assassination of the ruler of 50,000,000 people. From the inception of the trial to the present time, with the exception of yesterday, not a day has passed without being characterized by expressions on the part of the prisoner in contempt of the majesty of the law, in contempt of the authority of the court, and in imposing obstacles to the administration of justice.

"That's false," interrupted the prisoner.

Davidge—"We have understood from the beginning that your honor not only desired to accord to the prisoner the full measure of his rights, but that you wished not even to appear to infringe upon these rights. We have supposed that not only were these rights to be respected in their integrity, but that any error on the part of the court should be an error in trial which, without the interruptions of the prisoner, would have terminated three weeks ago. The time had come when a man who pretends to be an idiot should no longer sit at the counsel table and exercise privileges which would not be accorded to any member of the American bar."

Judge Cox briefly stated his reasons for assenting to this demand, and the prisoner turned pale when he heard the decision. In a humble manner he pleaded to the court, saying: "It may settle the question if I promise to keep quiet. If I am put in the dock I may be worse."

"It would be satisfactory," said the court, "if we could place any reliance upon your word."

"I will do whatever you say," said the prisoner; "but I ask that the court room be cleared."

"Oh," said Porter, "the prisoner is in no danger except from the hangman's rope."

Corkhill again said he was opposed to any extra guard around the prisoner. The deputy marshal started to fulfill the order of the court. The prisoner did not seem disposed to move, and he was threatened with handcuffs. "No, no," he cried, "don't put them on. I will go with you."

A scene of the wildest excitement prevailed while the dock was being cleared of spectators for the reception of the prisoner. The confusion lasted some minutes. The prisoner sat down in the dock, looking more like a wild beast at bay than a human being. His guard clustered around him, so that he was as safe as when in his old seat. He recognized this fact, and, as his courage returned, he pounded at the bar in his old style, and kept up a constant stream of interruptions, calling upon Almighty God to curse the prosecution.

On Thursday the cross-examination of Dr. Callendar was resumed. Scoville began to read a letter by Guiteau to Senator Cameron, written ten days ago, in order to get the views of the witness as to whether such a letter could be written by a sane person. Guiteau became furious, and said he simply asked Senator Cameron to loan him $500, and gave the letter to his brother John, who betrayed him and gave it to Scoville. He said his brother was a perfect nuisance, and that between them there was no fraternal feeling, and had been none for years. He said he had always associated with high-toned gentlemen—in theology like Moody and Pentecost, in politics like Grant and Conkling; but that his relations were crowding into the case to get a little notoriety. He repudiated the entire crew, and wanted them all, including Scoville, to get off the case. The following is the letter which was read:

"Dear Senator: I am on trial for my life, and I need money. I am a stalwart of the stalwarts, and so are you. You owe a great deal of Gen. Arthur, and so do I. My inspiration made him president, and I am going to ask you to lend me $500. If I get out of this I will return it. If not, charge it to the stalwarts.

"Yours, for our cause and very cordially,

"CHARLES GUITEAU."

Witness said the letter was consistent with a good many of Guiteau's acts and utterances and previous life, and in the line of his importunities for money from sources from which he could not reasonably expect it, and was no indication of unsoundness of mind.

The next witness was Dr. Walter Kempster, superintendent of the insane asylum at Winnebago, Wis. Witness did not agree with Spitzka that Guiteau had a malformed head. He had a fairly shaped head of full size, and that there was nothing unusual in the expression of his face. "I think the prisoner has been feigning insanity. When people come on the stand with whom he has been acquainted, he greets them as good fellows, and when their testimony goes against him he abuses them. The prisoner, in my opinion, is unsuccessfully endeavoring to simulate insanity."

Guiteau said: "I see by my letters that people are beginning to address me as Hon. Chas. Guiteau. That's an improvement over two months ago. I have a letter from a gentleman who says he has thirty-eight instances of specific inspiration from the bible in which Almighty God directed people to kill other people, and he said he can find more. [Laughter.] I have also a letter from a doctor in Chicago who says a lady cousin of his is expecting a baby, and if it's a boy she intends to call it Guiteau rather than Garfield." [Laughter.]

Cross-examination of the witness was not finished when the court adjourned.

At the opening of the court Friday, Guiteau arose and said: "Some of the leading papers in America consider me the brainiest man they have met for some time. [Laughter.] I have received a telegram from Boston, signed 'A host of admirers,' which says Boston sympathizes with me, and that I ought to be president. [Laughter.] I know of but two men who want me hung. One is Porter, because he expects $5,000 and the other is Mr. Corkhill. [Emphasizing the 'Mr.'] Corkhill is booked for removal anyway, and he wants to get even with me because he thinks I am responsible. It is said that I am too severe in my language. Now I want to say, 'Woe unto ye hypocrites, scribes, and pharisees! How can ye expect to escape the damnation of hell? Who said that? Who used the language? The meekly and lowly Jesus. Put my ideas into clean, sharp language and I have the example of the Savior of mankind for so doing. He called things by their right names. When any one assaulted him, he struck back. He did not lie down like the craven, nor did I. I refer my nomination for the presidency to the republican convention of 1884. I think I will be there. I do not think this jury is going into the hanging business to enable Porter to get that $5,000. They might as well try a man for killing another during war as try me on this issue. I acted under divine pressure, and I saved the nation from another war; but I will discuss this business when I get before the jury." This harangue was delivered in three parts after each of which Guiteau sat down, arising when he saw the audience were entertained and desired more. The court and counsel paid no attention to him.

When Guiteau sat down, Scoville resumed the cross-examination of Dr. Dempster. Witness said the alleged peculiarities of the Guiteau family were not, taken alone, indications of unsoundness of mind. The prisoner's claim to divine pressure did not correspond with the claims of persons suffering from real religious delusions. It was impossible for a person to be really insane for an hour or two, and then recover.

A long discussion ensued between counsel in regard to the admission of new evidence which the defense desire to introduce. Scoville said it might possibly take a week before they could get through. The assassin continued his interruptions, mocking Judge Porter derisively and patronizing the Judge and jury.

Dr. John P. Gray, medical superintendent of the New York State Lunatic asylum, was then called. His experience in the treatment of the insane extended over thirty years. He acted as commissioner by appointment of the governor of New York to examine persons convicted of felony and alleged to be insane. He agreed with most of the other experts for the prosecution. Guiteau said: "You are a very learned man, doctor, but you are forgetting the Abrahamic class to which I belong."

Witness gave a detailed statement of the personal examination he made of the prisoner in the jail. It did not differ with the examination of other experts. The conversation with the prisoner related to the principal incidents in his past life, and brought his career down to the time of the assassination. "It's a very interesting story," said Guiteau; "the doctor is giving all the facts as I told them." Witness then gave his conversations in detail in regard to the murder of Garfield, saying that the prisoner said the matter flashed across his mind at night during the time he was figuring for the Paris consulship. He thought it over and over, he said, and finally determined to remove the president because of the political situation. Guiteau said, in answer to one question at this conversation, that, if he had received the consulship, he would not have committed the act. Guiteau interrupted at almost every sentence, crying out about his divine pressure, etc. He said at one point: "I cannot be convicted except they show malice. That is the law on this case."

Witness produced a note-book in which he had jotted down the main points of these conversations with the prisoner. He had read over those notes to the prisoner at the time they were made. (Reading from the note-book)—"I asked him on what ground he killed the president. His answer was 'I considered his removal a political necessity. My defense will be insanity. I do not claim to be insane as you medical men judge of insanity, but my defense will be legal insanity.' I asked him, 'How do you define that kind of insanity which you will put as your defense?' His answer was, 'It is insanity, because it is in a legal sense irresponsibility, because it was an act without malice, and from political necessity. It cannot be called murder unless malice is proved. If I can establish the fact before the jury that I believed the killing of Garfield was inspired by God, I would not be held responsible before the law.'"

"That's correct," cried Guiteau, excitedly. "That's the law."

"You may add this," continued the witness reading the prisoner's language on this subject, "that the responsibility lies on the Deity and not on me, and that in law is insanity. If the jury believe, as I believe, that the removal was an act of God, and therefore not my own act, they are bound to acquit me on the ground of insanity. I have looked over it carefully."

"Yes," said the prisoner, "that is all there is to this case."

Witness proceeded with the report of a conversation, in which he referred to the inspiration as something which came into his mind. The prisoner admitted that he had to work himself up to the proper state to commit the murder, and that one of the strong points in his defense was hereditary insanity on account of his father's strange theological notions.

"From your examination of the prisoner, what opinion did you form of his mental condition?"

"My opinion was," said witness, "that he was sane."

"The court may adjourn now," said Corkhill, and the proceedings were accordingly suspended.

Speaking of the prosecution's intention to hurry the trial, Scoville said: "I will keep Dr. Gray on the stand all day to-morrow. I do not propose that they shall drive us to the gallows at railroad speed."

AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT!

Stone in the Bladder Expelled by Using Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Duchess, Co. N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the latter advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who, he said would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it, he passed a stone ⅜ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures Liver Kidney and Bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

WEST TECUMSEH.

R. J. W. Bowen, who is a telegraph operator, conceived the idea of having telegraphic communications with his neighbors. Last June he united with his neighbor, A. Mangus, on the east, and last week opened communications with his brother across the way, and, also with W. B. Keyser west of him, making a line about three-fourths of a mile long with 4 instruments. One would think the T. & M. R. R. was coming sure.

Miss Etta Spaulding, of Franklin, has been visiting in the neighborhood. Also H. Darling and wife of Muskegon.

Clover threshing is resumed since the freeze up.

CLINTON.

Miss Etta Wilson, of Franklin, has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Alden Rundell, of this place.

Charlie Johnson, of Toledo, spent Sunday in Clinton. The meaning of these frequent visits is obvious to all.

Miss Emma Saxton returned to Mason, last week to resume her duties as school teacher in that place.

E. R. Smith is putting up a barn back of the house he lately built on Franklin st. The lot is greatly improved in appearance thereby.

School opened again on Monday of this week. The position lately vacated by Miss Franc Matthews is now filled by Miss Anna Pennington, of Macon. Miss Matthews is teaching in Lawton and her many friends here hope she will meet with her due appreciation, which is most likely if the school in that village is conducted with less of strife and contention among the teachers than is found here.

George Freese is no longer a clerk in his father's store. On January 1st, he became a partner in the business. People well remember the change made in the firm two years ago. It was then, as now, known as E. W. Freese & Son, and while we regret that the younger partner was so suddenly taken from us by the hand of death, we wish the firm as it now stands, unlimited success.

Mrs. Hannah Rowland, mother of Mrs. C. C. Rowland of Clinton and Charles Willis of Tecumseh, died at the residence of the former, on Tuesday P. M.

ADDISON.

The few cool days of last week were greatly appreciated in this section of country. The highways becoming more travelable and business of all kinds receiving a notable impetus.

The hardware firm of F. F. Palmer & Son, of Hudson brought a stock of general merchandise here last week which will be closed out at bargains.

The regular January quarterly conference of the M. E. society will occur on Saturday and Sunday next.

A pleasant episode occurred here last Friday evening by way of a surprise party at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Briggs. The occasion proved an enjoyable one and we trust pleasantly remembered by them, as they anticipate leaving town for La Porte, Indiana in the spring.

Numerous of our townsmen regard the prospect for the final construction of the proposed T. & M. R. R. as better than heretofore, Mr. Latcha expressing himself to that effect.

SILVER CREEK, N.Y., Feb.6, 1880.

Gents—I have been very low, and have tried everything, to no advantage. I heard your Hop Bitters recommended by so many, I concluded to give them a trial. I did, and now am around, and constantly improving, and am nearly as strong as ever.

EAST RIDGEWAY.

On the 4th Rev. C. C. Sink organized a Young People's Benevolent and Literary Society, with twenty-nine members. The enterprise starts out with a full corps of able officers and committeemen as well as with flattering prospects.

The new year opened with the reverend rather seriously—in the fore noon, having been summoned to the burial of Mrs. Emmons, a member of his church, but the day closed in officiating at the marriage of Lyman Covell and Miss Hattie Palmer.

On the 10th, at 7:30 p. m, he also united in the bonds of wedlock Mr. Albert E. Palmer and Miss Isabella Willis, at the residence of Mr. John Houseman. This was a grand affair throughout; all the arangements were so systemized that the proceedings were remarkably adapted to the occasion. The ceremony pronounced was eloquent, the festivities was luxurious and abundant and the happy couple received the heartfelt congratulations of the large assemblage in attendance. Revisers of the law ... ment, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

In 1745 there was quite an anti-tea agitation in Scotland, where it was pronounced by the famous Duncan Forbes to be "in many respects an improper diet, expensive, wasteful of time, and calculated to render the people weakly effeminate." During that time there was a vigorous movement all over Scotland for abolishing the use of tea. Resolutions were passed by town councils and the inhabitants of villages condemning it and advocating beer. Sir William Fullerton's tenants in Ayrshire entered into the following bond: "We, being all farmers by profession, think it needless to restrain ourselves formally from indulging in that foreign and consumptive luxury called tea; for when we consider the slender constitutions of many of higher rank among whom it is used, we conclude that it would be but an improper diet to qualify us for the more robust and manly part of our business; and therefore we shall only give our testimony against it, and leave the enjoyment of it altogether to those who can afford to be weak, indolent and useless."

G. W. Jackson should have had credit last week for another boy.

Mrs. Laura Cheever is very sick with typhoid fever. Her daughter, Mrs. Lewis Priest who has been quite sick, is better.

Prof. E. A. Wilson has been home for two weeks. The school at Mt. Pleasant, of which he is superintendent has been suspended for two months on account of diphtheria.

Chas. Underwood has purchased the Peck place north of J. F. Temple a short distance north of the village with the prospect of making it his future home.

The assistant P. M. has returned and is getting down to business. He arrived just in time to find the postoffice in the old quarters.

Waring and Kniffin have received several car loads of pine lumber, and in a few days will have a full stock of dressed and rough assortments.

The community was shocked yesterday by learning of the sudden death of Noyes A. Darling, which took place at Ann Arbor where he was in attendance at school. He was sick about ten days but not considered dangerous until a short time before his death which occurred Monday evening. The remains were brought here Wednesday and interred in the family lot in Macon.

Skill in the Workshop.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. If long hours in confinement in close rooms have enfeebled his hand or dimmed his sight, let him at once, and before some organic trouble appears, take Hop Bitters. His system will be rejuvenated, his nerves strengthened, his sight become clear, and the whole constitution be built up to a higher working condition.

A Kind Word of Advice.

If you feel yourself growing weak, your strength failing, the natural functions of the body becoming impaired, take warning in time; your system needs Iron, which, when combined with proper vegetable extracts, produces a tonic of rare medicinal effect. Such a remedy is Brown's Iron Bitters. Buy it of your druggist and do not be persuaded to take a substitute, for this is the only remedy which gives permanent strength. It contains no alcohol, nor does it blacken the teeth. It receives the universal endorsement of clergymen, physicians, druggists, and all who have used it.

Mr. Martin A. Connolly, a merchant in Oil City, Pa., writes: "I inherited ill health from my parents, who were both short-lived. My wife is a sickly little woman, and has suffered considerably. We have had five children, three of whom died in infancy; the other two, a boy 4 years of age, and a girl of 7 years, have been quite puny, weakly and sickly. Some time ago I read a medical work that spoke of iron as being essential to life, that a want of iron in the blood was the principal cause of ill health. Shortly afterward I saw an advertisement of Brown's Iron Bitters. I determined to try it for myself and family. The result has far exceeded by greatest anticipation. Myself, wife and children have all grown healthy and strong.—Sores, aches and pains, headaches, indigestion and sleeplessness, formerly so common in my family, trouble us no more. Every bottle is worth its weight in gold.

Adrian Times: A Blissfield blacksmith got up on a recent Saturday morning imagining that it was Sunday, and actually staid in the house all day for fear of breaking the Sabbath. When he presented himself at the shop Sunday morning for work, and found out his mistake he was so mad that he hired a boy to kick him back home.

Pleasant Letters.

They are sheets of sunshine. A Methodist clergyman, of Hartford, Conn., writes to David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., that "Favorite Remedy" cured him of Chronic Liver Disease and Indigestion, from which he had suffered for a long time. This was splendid, but nothing more than any one may expect who uses this medicine. One Dollar a bottle is a small consideration when health was is in question. The clergyman says he is going to introduce Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" among his people. He can't do better.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants, Parsons' Exterminator. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

Rheumatism, neuralgia, hysteria, female weakness, etc. promptly cured with Brown's Iron Bitters.

A HOUSEKEEPER'S TRAGEDY.

One day as I wandered I heard a complaining,
And saw a poor woman, the picture of gloom.
She glared at the mud on the door-step (twas raining
And this was her wail as she wielded the broom:

"Oh! life is a toil and love is a trouble,
And beauty will fade and riches will flee,
And pleasures they dwindle and prices they double,
And nothing is what I could wish it to be."

"There's too much of worldment goes to a bonnet,
There's too much to do for a living, you see,
There's nothing that pays for the time wasted on it,
There's nothing that lasts but trouble and care.

"In March it is mud, it's slush in December,
And midsummer's freezes are latest with dust,
In fall the leaves litter, in muggy September
The wall-paper rots and the flat irons rust."

"There are worms in the cherries, and slugs in the roses,
And ants in the sugar, and mice in the pies,
The rubbish of spiders, no mortal supposes,
And ravaging roaches and thawing flies."

"It's sweeping at six and dusting at seven,
It's victuals at eight and dishes at nine,
It's potting and panning from ten to eleven,
We scarce break our fast ere we plan how to dine.

"With grease and with litter from outside to center,
Forever at war and forever alert,
No rest for a day lest the enemy enter,
I spend my whole time in a struggle with dirt."

"Last night in my dreams, I was stationed forever
On a bare little isle in the midst of the sea,
My one chance of life was a ceaseless endeavor
To sweep off the waves, ere they swept over me."

"Alas! 'twas no dream—again I behold it,
I yield, I am helpless my fate to avert;"

Sea-Dust.

People laughed at the man who said that the fish he had hooked "kicked up such a dust in the water." Perhaps they will laugh at the heading to this article, but there will still be "sea-dust," nevertheless.

We have heard of water-spouts, of showers of fish, of salt rain, and many other curiosities which present themselves in the atmosphere, but to assert that there is such a thing as sea-dust is to transcend all reasonable bounds. The evidence, however, in favor of its existence is exceedingly powerful—indisputable, in fact—and this is the story told by eye-witnesses. They say that in certain parts of the world, notably about the Cape de Verde Islands, there are constantly met at sea, several hundred miles away from land, thick, yellowish-red fogs, not unlike London fogs in November. These fogs obscure the atmosphere, and are very injurious to navigation, but they have not the baleful odor of their London prototypes, nor do they affect the breathing in the same way. Whilst sailing through them it is found that the ship, sails and rigging are covered with a fine, impalpable powder, which falls as dry rain, and covers the surface on which it falls sometimes to the depth of two inches. In color, it is of a brick-dust hue, sometimes of a light yellow, and it feels between the teeth like fine grit, such as might be blown into the mouth on a windy day in March. No place is free from its presence, its fineness giving it power to penetrate everywhere. The sea, while the dust is falling, looks as if it had been peppered, and is discolored for some distance down. Sometimes the dust comes in a shower, and passes off again. The fogs are nothing but vast quantities of the dust suspended in the air.

It is not only in the vicinity of the Cape de Verde that this wonderful dust is seen. In the Mediterranean, on the northern parts of Africa, in the middle of the Atlantic, it has been reported. It is invariably the same in kind and appearance, and examination under microscopes was proved the identity of said Cape de Verde sea-dust with Mediterranean sea-dust. All this is very remarkable; dust falling in clouds, no land within some hundred of miles, nothing visible which could possibly account for the curious phenomenon. Sand-spouts there are in sandy deserts, and showers of sand taken originally from spots whereon the carrier wind has left its mark; but here there is no desert from which the sand can be rapt, and the wind, so far from being boisterous, or disposed to play whirlwind pranks, is light and steady, blowing ships along at a calm five knots an hour.

In connection with these facts, hear what Humboldt says of the sight he saw in the dry river beds and sandy valleys of Central America: "When beneath the vertical rays of the bright and cloudless sun of the tropics, the parched sward crumbles into dust, then the indurated soil cracks and bursts, as if rent asunder by some mighty earthquake; and if at such a time two opposite currents of air by conflict moving in rapid gyrations, come in contact with the earth, a singular spectacle presents itself. Like funnel-shaped clouds, their apexes touching the earth, the sands rise in vapory form through the rarefied air in the electrically charged centre of the whirling current, sweeping on like the rushing water-spouts which strike such terror into the hearts of the mariner. A dim and sallow light gleams from the lowering sky over the dreary plain. The horizon suddenly contracts, and the heart of the traveler sinks with dismay as the wide steppe seems to close upon him on all sides. The hot and dusty earth forms a cloudy veil which shrouds the heavens from view, and increases the stifling oppression of the atmosphere."

It is believed by scientific men that these dust-clouds of Central America are, in all probability, closely connected with the phenomenon of sea-dust.

American Flag.

The great union flag, raised by command of Washington at Cambridge, Jan. 2, 1776, originated in a combination of ideas, derived very gradually from the cross of St. George and the saltire of St. Andrew, through the British Union Jack and commercial flag, and immediately from the standard of the Philadelphia Light Horse of 1774, now the First Troop Philadelphia City Cavalry; and the star-spangled banner arose from the Continental great union flag through the replacement of the British "quarter," or "union," by the American "quarter" or "union" of thirteen white stars upon a blue ground. That the American flag really dates from May 23 or 24, 1776, was shown by means of the story of the Widow Ross (Betsy Griscom,) who made in Philadelphia the first star-spangled banner; and the narrative of the cruise of the brig "Nancy" of Wilmington, Del., Capt. Hugh Montgomery, who was the first that ever raised in a foreign port the star-spangled banner, which he fought under and preserved at Cape Island, N. J., June 29, 1776; both these being confirmed in all particulars by six reliable contemporary accounts.

The Distance of a Star from the Earth.

For many ages this question puzzled astronomers: How far off are the stars? It was known that their distance was great, very great. It was known that they were immeasurably farther off than the sun, the moon, or any of the planets; but it is only in the present century that the question has been even partially answered.

Of the countless thousands of stars which stud the universe, the distance of perhaps about twenty has been determined. Others which have been tried have defied the powers of the most skillful astronomers, aided by the most elaborate instruments; their distance is too great to allow of measurement, while the rest of the vast host which stud our firmament have not yet been examined with this object.

The inquiry is one of the most delicate and subtle which can engage the attention of an astronomer. It is impossible to explain here the manner in which it is conducted; we must endeavor rather to realise the result which has rewarded these successful labors. There is a beautiful star in the southern hemisphere, the brightest in the constellation Centaur, one of the most brilliant stars in the heavens. This was diligently observed by the skillful astronomer who managed the observatory at the Cape of Good Hope in the years 1832 and 1833. He found as the result of his labors, that the distance of this star—Alpha Centauri, as it is called—is twenty billions of miles.

It requires a little consideration to estimate what the words twenty billions of miles really mean. A billion contains one million millions, and we shall endeavor to convey an idea of this amount by a few simple illustrations. Supposing our great forefather Adam had commenced to count as quickly as he could, and that when his life was ended his son commenced to count, taking up from the number at which Adam left off, and spent his whole life, day and night, counting as fast as he could, and supposing that at his death he enjoined on his heirs an eternity of counting, and that they had continued doing so up to the present moment, their united efforts would not yet have reached the amount of one quarter of a billion; and yet the distance of the star is twenty billions of miles!

A good target can be made of pasteboard and set up in a split stick, stuck in the ground; and arm-guards can be gotten up from a piece of firm, polished leather, with elastic bands to hold it upon the arm.

There is but one way to shoot well, and it is better to adopt that at the outset.

First, brace the bow; that is to say, string it. For a bow should never be put away strung. Then put the arrow nock on the string with your right hand, while your left grasps the handle of the bow holding it horizontally, with the arrow on the string. Hook the first, second and third fingers under the string, taking the arrow between the first and second.

Now, with the left hand, turn the bow till it stands perpendicularly before you, your left hand extended towards the target.

Draw with your right and push firmly with your left hand till the arrow-head rests on the lowest joint of your left forefinger. Your hand will now touch your right ear.

"Look straight and hard at the centre of the target, but do not even glance at your arrow. Blindly direct your arrow by your sense of feeling. Let go." These are the directions given by Maurice Thompson of Indiana, than whom there is no better living authority.

Never try to "take aim," nor sight along the arrow as if it were a gun-barrel, but shoot from your general sense of direction. Stick to this rule, even if your first shots are very wild.

When done shooting, even for an hour, unstring the bow. Give it a rest. Never put it away strung. After each day's shooting rub and polish it with oil; or, better, with a mixture of oil and wax. A bow demands even more care than a rifle. It should always be kept in a dry chest or closet, and will do better service if kept wrapped in oil skin or green baize. The object is to keep all moisture out of the grain and fibre of the wood.

Good well-finished bows of second growth ash and other American woods sell generally at from one dollar to three dollars, or even more according to size. Bows of lancewood, snakewood, yew and foreign woods, cost from two to eight dollars.

Target arrows will range, according to their length, from two dollars and a half to five dollars per dozen. Hunting arrows with barbed piles for large game, are still higher in price; while light birding arrows, with pewter heads are cheaper.

Bow strings come at twenty, twenty-five, and up to sixty cents each, and targets range in price from one dollar to six dollars.

Quivers (with belt) made of tin and covered with light leather, cost from one dollar to two dollars and a half each. But for hunting excursions, quivers made of stiff harness leather, capable of holding two or three dozen arrows, are best.

Bracers, or arm-guards, will cost about a dollar. These are to protect the left arm from the blows and chafing of the bow-spring.

The three-fingered shooting glove for the right hand, having the finger-ends of some stiff smooth leather, is sold for a dollar. But an old kid or lisle thread glove will answer nearly as well.

The bows, the arrows and the entire outfit, can of course be made at home, if for any reason a person does not wish to purchase them.

It is not necessary that the bow should be made from any one particular kind of wood. Mulberry, hickory and red oak are all suitable, and I have seen good bows of hazel, white maple and even of poplar. There is not so much in the kind of wood as in having the piece well seasoned, and choosing a live, springy stick to start with.

Mr. Thompson says that the back of a bow should be made flat, and the inside round. The flat back must follow the grain of the wood exactly. How much it should be shaved down can only be determined by trying it, at times, as you work it.

How to Water Horses.—In very cold weather give one pailful at a time three times a day. This is enough unless you are working them regularly; then give a little more, but not to exceed four pailfuls a day. In warm weather when they are brought in, first sponge out the mouth and nostrils well with cold water. After a few spongings they will wait for it to be done. Then give them not to exceed one pailful apiece, and another after feeding, before commencing work. Don't let them go without long enough to make them want more than this. If allowed, a thirsty horse will drink too much when warm. A common 12-quart pail is here referred to.

The owner of a pair of bright eyes says the prettiest compliment she ever received came from a child of four years, who, after looking intently at her, inquired naively: "Are your eyes new ones?"

Etiquette of Conversation.

From Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms.

Do not manifest impatience.

Do not engage in argument.

Do not interrupt another when speaking.

Do not find fault, though you may gently criticise.

Do not talk of your private, personal and family matters.

Do not appear to notice inaccuracies of speech in others.

Do not allow yourself to lose temper or speak excitedly.

Do not allude to unfortunate peculiarities of any one present.

Do not always commence a conversation by allusion to the weather.

Do not, when narrating an incident, continually say, "you see," "you know," etc.

Do not intrude professional or other topics that the company generally cannot take an interest in.

Do not talk very loud. A firm, clear, distinct, yet mild, gentle, musical voice has great power.

Do not be absent minded, requiring the speaker to repeat what has been said that you may understand.

Do not speak disrespectfully of personal appearance when anyone present may have the same defects.

Do not try to force yourself into the confidence of others. If they give their confidence never betray it.

Do not use profanity, vulgar terms, slang phrases, words of double meaning, or language that will bring the blush to any one.

Do not intersperse your language with foreign words and high sounding terms. It shows affectation, and will draw ridicule upon you.

Do not carry on a conversation with another in company about matters which the general company knows nothing of. It is almost as impolite as to whisper.

Do not allow yourself to speak ill of the absent one if it can be avoided; the day may come when some friend will be needed to defend you in your absence.

Do not speak with contempt and ridicule of a locality where you may be visiting; find something to praise and fully praise, and [illegible] are likely to [illegible] with rebuke.

Do not whisper in company; do not engage in private conversation; do not speak a foreign language which the general company present may not understand, unless it is understood that the foreigner is unable to speak your own language.

Do not take it upon yourself to admonish comparative strangers on religious topics; the persons to whom you speak may have decided convictions of their own in opposition to yours, and your over-zeal may seem to them an impertinence.

Do not aspire to be a great story-teller; an inveterate teller of long stories becomes very tiresome. To tell one or two witty, short, new stories, appropriate to the occasion, is about all that one person should inflict on the company.

Do not indulge in satire; no doubt you are witty, and you could say a most cutting thing that would bring the laugh of the company down on your opponent, but you must not allow it, unless to rebuke some impertinent fellow who can be suppressed in no other way.

Do not spend your time in talking scandal; you sink your own moral nature by so doing, and you are, perhaps, doing great injustice to those about whom you talk. You probably do not understand all the circumstances. Were they understood, you would doubtless be much more lenient.

Do not flatter; in doing so you embarrass those upon whom you bestow praise, as they may not wish to offend you by repelling it, and yet they realize that if they accept it they merit your contempt. You may, however, commend their work whenever it can truthfully be done; but do not bestow praise where it is not deserved.

Quick and Sure.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves, when by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength quickly and surely coming back to them.

Ouray's Horse Race.

A SHARP TURF TRANSACTION.

In 1874, when the Utes and Navajoes were not warring with each other or employed in investigating the firmness with which the white man's scalp was attached, they devoted themselves to horse-racing, betting blankets, ponies and their squaws even upon the result of the contests. Now, although there is no Longe flash in the world, that can horse a Ute pony behind when starting rough and ready on moonlight trails or hold up his for long journeys, they are not remarkably fast racers on level ground. So, however, may the confession sits, after a week of dust, the Utes were obliged to acknowledge that their horses were inferior to those of the Navajoes; but by the time they were convinced of this fact, the Utes little were nearly bankrupt. The Navajoes gathered up their spoils and departed for their tents, while the Utes went to Ouray with their tale of woe. Saponiro, Sapavino and Coje were all heavy losers, but at the council which Ouray called could suggest no plan to retrieve their losses, except to follow the victorious Navajoes and by force deprive them of their booty. To this proposition Ouray would not assent, saying that such a deed would stain the name of their tribe, and dismissed the council, telling the Utes to challenge the Navajoes to another series of races two months from that time, September, 1874, and he would attend to the best. Through H. F. Bond, the agent, Ouray having raised $1,500 by the sale of some of his stock, sent to St. Louis and purchased a Membrino racer, a bay, and had him brought to his house. At the expiration of the two months the Navajoes came down, bringing with them their best racer, one who had won eight races in the former contests, and called Wachita by the Navajoes. Ouray caused it to be given out that he had brought a pony from Utah to contest the races, and the Navajoes were on the tip-toe of expectation as he was brought forth. When the blankets (with which he was covered from head to foot) were removed, and painted all over to present the appearance of a half-starved pony, the bay appeared, a shout of derision rent the air from the throats of the Navajoes, and they began to bet odds three blankets against one and the like) against his winning. The Utes said nothing, but, instructed by Ouray, took every bet that was offered, even if they risked their last blanket. The course used by them was about three miles long, a level mesa. Wachita was ridden by his owner and the bay by the son of Sapavanaro. The word was given, and the horses started amid an anticipating shout of victory from the Navajoes, which quavered away into groan as they saw their favorite beaten by a neck as they crossed the line. The close race made them think the defeat of Wachita was due to the bad riding of his owner. In the twinkling of an eye he was pulled off by a dozen hands, and Math-o-an, a sub-chief of the Navajoes, put on the back of Wachita. This time the betting was heavier than at first, the Utes betting eagerly and the Navajoes desperately. Sapavanaro's boy gave the bay his head and he came across the line nearly a quarter of a mile ahead of Wachita. The Navajoes were "busted" and the Utes were rich. They had not only recovered what they had before lost, but their tepees were filled with blankets and buffalo robes, while each Navajoe was the poorer by a pony. So completely "broke" were they that the Utes tell with glee how they rode to their homes, some riding double and others walking. This incident greatly increased Ouray's influence over his tribe, and caused all of them to look up to him as a wise man.—Denver Tribune.

What is Healthful Exercise?

This is a question we propounded to one of our leading physicians yesterday. He did not answer us specifically. "A man in sedentary occupation," said the doctor, ought not to take violent exercise. Exercise, like everything else that is good should be taken in moderation. That is the objection to rowing and kindred amusements. They are not healthful because carried to excess. Horseback riding is good exercise, so is walking. But whatever the form of exercise do not pursue it to extremes."

There is a deal of sense in what the doctor says. Nearly all the great pugilists, boatmen and oarsmen, pedestrians, athletes and men who are specially trained for extraordinary feats of physical endurance, break down early. They exhaust their stock of vitality prematurely. It is the natural development that is the most enduring. What men need in every pursuit in life is "staying powers," tenacity, longevity and evenness of muscular growth. Sudden spurts of strength impinge lightly upon either the economic or moral results of life. For this reason we may prudently accredit that rule the best which commands to us a moderate amount of physical exercise, and regular intervals as regards time and quality. Coasting, base ball, pedestrianism are none of them necessarily unhealthy. On the contrary they are healthful, and a delightful combination of recreation and physical development. But how few use them wisely as tools for this purpose! The great majority indulge to excess. The excitement of the contest, the fierce requirements of rivalry, and the potency of example, carry the enthusiasm to a high pitch, and the physical frame is taxed to an injurious degree.

No sane person denies the value of food. It is essential to life. It is possible to live without exercise; it is not possible to live without food. And yet if a man were to partake of food as he sometimes partakes of exercise he would be accounted a fool; for, if he fasted two or three days, and then gorged himself with all he could eat, he would be a speedy patient for the physician. And yet, in so doing, he would only be stepping into a parallel niche with the man who takes rest and exercise in about that portion of time and intensity.

The up-building of physicial manhood and womanhood is one of the great privileges and duties of every human life. The future not only of individuals but of nations depends in large measure upon the wisdom of the rising and future generations in this respect. Nature builds up by a slow but continuous process. The vegetation that springs up in a night is comparatively valueless. The wood of steady and uninterrupted growth has the best fibre. Exercise, rightly used, is an element of human physical development. Wrongfully or immoderately used it is a bane.

THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any point on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

A young lawyer in Kansas, having had a case decided against him by the court, said: "Well, now just take this case before another jury and let him make a guess what they think."

Mamma: "Well, Johnny, I shall forgive you this time, and I'm pretty sorry you to write a letter to one I'm sorry." Johnny: "Yes, Ma. Don't trouble you please." Mamma: "Why not?" Johnny: "Because it will do for the next."

A man called his friend that joined the army. "What regiment?" his friend asked. "Oh! I don't know. I mean the army of the Lord." "What church?" "The Baptist." "Why, the reply, "that's not the army, it's the navy."

A Baptist Weekly tells the story that, while a collection was taken up for the church debt in a New York congregation, the choir was singing, and the German tenor surprised people with an unexpectedly apt addition: "Und ze debt shall be raised in ze twinkling of an eye."

Before Fanny Fern married James Parton, she wrote in the union of Broadway, "Here comes Sara Parton, who doesn't believe in the law." George D. Prentice, of the Louisville Journal, copied it subsequently and added: "Ah, Fanny, that was before she married."

"Sir," said an astonished landlady to a traveler who had sent up forward the seventh time, "You must be fond of coffee." "Yes, madam, I am, indeed, "or I never should have drunk so much water to get a little."

A gentleman who called at his rooms in Washington, told by his young negro servant: "Mr. Sumner, he gone to the Senate to make a speech." "What speech?" asked the gentleman in surprise. "Why, dat speech he's been hollering out in bed every morning dese free weeks."

A story is told of Mr. Butler's sarcastic retort upon a Massachusetts judge when he was teasing him during a trial favorable to a cause he was defending in court. The judge got out of patience at last, and somewhat testily exclaimed to Mr. Butler, "What do you think I sit here for?" The General quietly shrugged his shoulders and replied: "The Court has got the law."

A young woman from Springfield, Mass., teaching the Indians at Hampton, Va., was drilling a company of girls on the hymn, "Yield not to temptation," and trying to explain to them the meaning of the words. Some time after the class was dismissed a pupil came to her and said, "Me think victory!" meaning that she had gained a victory. Being asked to explain, she said: "Indian girl, she big temptation to me; I no yield; I fight her."

The ridges are composed of a friable sandstone, into which the ants minute masons mine deeply, digging cheries which sometimes run for several feet into the rock. The nest, outwardly, some ten inches in diameter by from two to three and a half inches in height, composed of sand and bits of stone carried from hand, some of which seem large enough to defy a regiment of ants to move them.

Inside the nests numerous chambers are excavated, connected by galleries, the floors of the chambers being comparatively smooth, while the walls are left in a rough state. But this roughness is no evidence of carelessness in the builder. It has, on the contrary, an important object: this is to furnish footholds for the clinging feet of certain extraordinary-looking creatures, which form the living honey-combs of which we have spoken.

Fancy an animal with the head and thorax of a small ant with all the posterior portion of the body converted into a round sac, of the size of a large pea, and of a rich translucent amber hue—it being, in fact, distended into a reservoir of honey. This honey-bag is immense when compared with the size of the ant, the unchanged parts of which might pass for a black pin's head attached to the side of a marrow-fat pea. These odd-looking creatures cling to the roof of the chamber with their feet, the distended honey-bag hanging downward like an amber globe. On seeing them we instinctively imagine that their leg-muscles must be developed in a fashion to put to shame the feats of human athletes, since it is no light weight which they are thus forced to continually support.

"John, what oil is that?" "Cloves, love." "But that her?" "Allspice, my beloved." "But if there another?" "Yes, apples, bevedest." "Just one more?" "Raisins, my most belovedest." "Well, John, if you only just drink a little brandy, now I think you would make a good nimpie."

It must have been tremendously embarrassing to that nice young man out at Bowling Green, N. Y., who escorted the preacher's fair daughter to church Sunday night, and arrived late, to hear the reverend gentleman read from the Bible as the couple marched up the aisle, "My daughter is grievously tormented with a devil," which verse occurs in an account of a New Testament miracle. The whole congregation shrieked, and it would be hard to tell which felt the worst, the preacher, his daughter, or her escort.

A Test of Indian Courage.

An Indian inter-tribal fair was held, not long ago, in order to show some of the results of civilizing the savages. A number of tribes attended and displayed articles of home manufacture such as needle-work, embroidery, lace work and blankets. Many of the Indians had their pictures taken, and showed a childish delight in looking at their faces. Other however, could not be persuaded to go near the camera. Yellow Bear, of the Arapahoes, was the first to pass through the ordeal of a sitting. He suffered himself to be properly seated, and then the camera to be brought to bear upon him; but when the prepared plate was placed in the box, and the cloth lifted, he leaped to his feet at a bound, and attempted to leave the tent. All attempts to reason with him failed. At last a photograph of a Cheyenne, taken some years ago, was shown him. He looked at it a moment then went quietly back to his chair, and sat there like a statue while the negative was taken. He explained that no Cheyenne warrior was a greater brave than he. The gigantic Osages on the other hand, would not approach the tent. They say the camera robs them of their good spirits. The Kickapoos gave the very same reason, and the photographer was peremptorily ordered out of the country on that account. The Indian is a profound believer in the power of spirits for good or evil, and takes care never to offend them.

The Highest Rank.

Made from harmless materials, and adapted to the needs of fading and falling hair, Parker's Hair Balsam has taken the highest rank as an elegant and reliable hair restorative.

Comets.

The comets on record exceed 800. What are called "short period" comets are: Encke's, whose time of revolution is 3½ years; De Vico's, 5½; Winnecke's 5½; Brorson's 5½; Bida's, 6½; D'Arrest's, 6½; Faye's, 7½; Mechain's, 13½; Halley's 76½.

The long-period comets are those of 1680, whose time of revolution is 8,814 years; that of 1744, 122,631 years; of 1770, 75,314 years; of 1811, 3,000 years; of 1840, 13,893 years; of 1811, 102,050 years; of 1847, 13,918 years; of 1858, 24,050 years; of 1860, 16,334 years.

Biela's comet divided into two parts in 1846, and in 1852 those parts were 1,250,000,000 miles apart, and had entirely disappeared by 1866.

Coggia's comet was discovered in 1874. It is non-periodical and was 133,000,000 miles from the sun when discovered. In July of that year it was within 62,000,000 miles of both earth and sun, and its tail was computed to be 12,000,000 miles in length.

Donati's comet, discovered in 1858, had a tail 40,000,000 miles long, and its main body very nearly collided with Venus. Although supposed to be vaporous, this comet was calculated by M. Faye to have the weight of a sea 327 feet deep and 40,000 square miles in extent.

Halley's comet has been identified as identical with the comets of 1531, 1607, 1066 and 1223. Its reappearance is prognosticated for 1912.

Encke's comet possesses no tail, usually. In 1848, however, it presented two tails, one toward and one from the sun.

Lexell's, or "the lost comet," was caught or entangled among the satellites of Jupiter in 1770, reappeared in 1779, again became entangled, and has not been seen since.

The superstitions of all times and nations have regarded the appearance of comets with dread, as being omens of disaster. The spectroscope fails to show their chemical composition. It was shown by Schiapavilli, in 1872, that comets are sometimes connected with meteoric showers, and his discovery has been indorsed by noted astronomers.

Tycho Brahe discovered that comets are extraneous to our atmosphere, and Newton that they are subjected to the same principle which guides the planets.

How a Woman Mails a Letter.

Some crusty curmudgeon thus tells how a woman goes to work to mail a letter. It is a libel on the sex. Some of the girls will make it red hot for him if discovered:

"Any day when you have time you can see how she does it by dropping into the post-office. She arrives there with a letter in her hand. It is a sheet of note in a white envelope. She halts in front of the stamp window, opens her mouth to ask for a stamp, but suddenly darts away to see if she has made any error in names or dates.

It takes five minutes for her to make sure of this, and then she balances the letter on her finger, and the awful query arises in her mind: 'Perhaps it is overweight.' She steps to the window and asks the clerk if he has a three-cent stamp, fearing that he hasn't, and she looks over every compartment in her portmonnie before she finds the change to pay for it.

The fun commences as she gets the stamp. She sidles around to one side, removes her gloves, closely inspects the stamp, and hesitates whether to 'lick' it or wet her finger.

She finally concludes it wouldn't be nice to show her tongue, and wets her finger and passes it over the envelope. She is so long picking up the stamp that the moisture is absorbed and the stamp slides off the envelope. She tries it twice more with like success, and getting desperate she gives the stamp a lick and it sticks.

Then comes the sealing of the letter. She wets her finger again, but the envelope flies open, and after three minutes delay she has to pass her tongue along the streak of dried mucilage.

She holds the letter a long time to make sure that the envelope is all right, and finally appears at the window and asks: 'Three cents is enough, is it?' 'Yes, ma'am.' 'This will go out to-day?' 'Certainly.' 'Will it go to Chicago without the name of the county on?' 'Just the same.' 'What time will it reach there?' 'To-morrow morning.' She sighs, turns the letter over and over, and finally asks: 'Shall I drop it into one of those places there?' 'Yes, ma'am.'

She walks up in front of the six orifices, closely scans each one of them, finally makes a choice, and drops—no she doesn't. She stops to see where it will fall, pressing her face against the window until she flattens her nose out of shape, and she doesn't drop it where she intended to. She, however, releases it at last, looks down to make sure that it did not fall on the floor, and turns away with a sigh of regret that she didn't take one more look at the superscription."

Skinny Men

Wells' Health Renewer. Absolute cure for nervous debility and weakness of the generative functions. $1, at druggists. Mich. Depot, J. E. Davies & Co., Detroit, Mich.

EYE-WATER.—Take half a pound of grape-vine—wild is the best—put it in one quart of water, boil it down to one pint; take four tablespoonfuls of the liquid of the grape-vine, three teaspoonfuls of fine table-salt, three teaspoonfuls of white vitriol; mix them in one pint of soft water, then strain through filtering paper. For application, drop one drop in the eyes every morning and evening. If too strong at first, weaken with a little soft water.

CURE FOR NEURALGIC PAIN.—"Edna" sends the following to the Inter-Ocean: This simple recipe, signed "R. B. J.," which I clipped from an old paper, has proved of inestimable value to many. "Some time since, while suffering from neuralgic pains in the face, it occurred to me that egg poultice might relieve. Mixing an egg with corn-meal, or any coarse flour, proved not only in this case when applied, but in many since, equally effective." My mother, after having suffered two or three days and nights with severe toothache and face-ache, tried the above remedy and experienced relief in a few moments.

"Tention!" exclaimed an Irish sergeant to his platoon, "Front face and to roll call! As many of ye as is present will say 'Here!' and as many of ye as is not present will say 'Absint!'"

Why He Groaned.

In this county, no matter where, reside two lawyers, no matter whom. Suffice it to say these lawyers are young, genial, and deep in legal lore, and as such are occasionally sought after in criminal cases of small import. A very short time ago, no matter when, professional duties called them before a certain justice of the peace in the county. One was to prosecute and the other defend. The case was conducted with skill and ability, and the court, encouraged to such bounced with deep admiration upon the young lawyers, and was happy. The time arrived for the prosecuting attorney to deliver his speech, and he waxed eloquent on the subject of carrying concealed weapons, and made a moving appeal in the name of the law that visibly affected the court muchly, who mentally vowed vengence against the culprit. All at once, however, and for some unaccountable cause his eloquence suddenly ceased. His left leg seemed to be troubling him beyond measure, and he affectionately grasped it with both hands and groaned dismally as he cast an appealing look towards the door, as if he desired above all earthly things to be on the outside. All at once the mystery was cleared up. An innocent revolver glided out of the pants onto the floor. The young attorney was incontinently floored, and the court, who had been revolving in his mind the propriety of sending for all the doctors in the neighborhood, was astonished—wiped his eyes and ahem'd ominously. The young attorney was unable to offer any excuse, and the court promptly fined him $25 and costs, and hereafter he will be more careful.—Fremont (Iowa) Democrat.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

In 1743 there was quite an anti-tea agitation in Scotland, where it was pronounced by the famous Duncan Forbes to be "in many respects an improper diet, expensive, wasteful of time, and calculated to render the people weakly effeminate." During that time there was a vigorous movement all over Scotland for abolishing the use of tea. Resolutions were passed by town councils and the inhabitants of villages condemning it and advocating beer. Sir William Fullerton's tenants in Ayrshire entered into the following bond: "We, being all farmers by profession, think it needless to restrain ourselves formally from indulging in that foreign and consumptive luxury called tea; for when we consider the slender constitutions of many of higher rank among whom it is used, we conclude that it would be but an improper diet to qualify us for the more robust and manly part of our business; and therefore we shall only give our testimony against it, and leave the enjoyment of it altogether to those who can afford to be weak, indolent and useless."

Had covetous men, as the fable goes of Briareus, each of them one hundred hands, they would all of them be employed in grasping and gathering, and hardly one of them in giving or laying out, but all in receiving and none in restoring: a thing in itself so monstrous that nothing in nature besides is like it, except it be death and the grave, the only things I know which are always carrying off the spoils of the world and never making restitution. For otherwise, all the parts of the universe, as they borrow of one another, so they still pay what they borrow, and that by so just and well balanced an equality that their payments always keep pace with their receipts.—[Dryden.

F. H. Drake's Sufferings.

F. H. Drake, Esq., Detroit, Mich., suffered beyond all description from a skin disease, which appeared on his hands, head and face, and nearly destroyed his eyes. The most careful doctoring failed to help him, and after all had failed he used the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally, Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and was cured, and has remained perfectly well to this day.

Reading in the Boston Schools.

The Boston School Committee has devised a plan for lending special attractiveness to the unusually dull half hour devoted to the exercise of reading in the public schools. The regular readers have been supplemented by selected stories from general literature. The primary children, for instance, are regaled with "Jack the Giant-Killer," "Little Red Riding Hood," and other juvenile fictions printed in a pamphlet for school use. The older children have selected tales from the "Arabian Nights," and other entertaining fictions are to be prepared for their delectation. The superintendent claims that the introduction of this new feature has been surprisingly successful. The children, whose every look and act showed how tedious and irksome the reading hour was to them, are now all attention and animation. They are not allowed to read the books out of school hours, and the text is therefore new to them at each lesson. Especially among the poorer children, whose pleasure reading is confined to an occasional dime novel or trashy paper, is the improvement noticeable, and in no better way, considers Superintendent Eliot, can a pure and elevated taste for good reading be implanted.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Embrocations do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

ARTHURS'

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I can't send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

Christmas, Merry Christmas has come and gone. How many glad reminders it has left behind, how many sweet remembrances of it are garnered away in the storehouse of memory to be brought forth in the future as so many bright, golden threads woven into the woof of life. Ah! how many hearts filled with joy and throbbed with gladness this Christmas, will be overshadowed with the dark clouds of sorrow and sadness, or clasped to the cold, clayey breast of death when another one visits us.

What a splendid, mild, summer-like day was Christmas with us. The thermometer indicated but a few degrees below summer heat. As its arrival fell on Sunday the happy people commenced to celebrate its coming on Saturday, and Sunday's hallowing influences did not restrain some from giving vent to their joyful feelings and indulging in exhibitions of hilarity that, at any other time, would have been considered entirely out of place and reprehensible. On Monday the partially restrained feelings of the people broke forth in full force and everybody flung away dull care—smiled with the loving sunbeams and kicked up their heels in the very pathos of unbounded thankfulness. At night the skies were resplendent with the most brilliant spectacle of pyrotechnic skill, and old Santa Claus distributed his gifts with a bountiful hand.

How much good might be done, how many hearts made happy, by a judicious distribution of the means squandered in dissipation and extravagant display on this day, among those who cower beneath the frowns of adverse fortune, whose hearts are bruised and lacerated by affliction.—And how much more would such a course be in keeping with the life and teachings of Him who went about doing good, indulging in no revelry, making no useless display, whose advent on earth this day is set apart to commemorate—the meek and lowly Jesus.

As I sit here in this far off Southland penning these lines memory is busy recalling many a Christmas and Christmas scene in the North. In imagination I hear the merry tinkle of sleigh bells, see the sleighs gliding swiftly over the glistening, creaking snow, hear the mirthful laugh and gleeful songs of the occupants, so snugly tucked up in buffalo robes and furs, bidding defiance to Jack Frost; as these scenes pass in panoramic review before memory, I can but exclaim "The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow," but bless my eyes I haven't seen a flake of it this winter. Some winters we are visited by sparse falls of snow, but as it falls on unfrozen ground it soon disappears. As far as sleighs and sleigh-bells they would be about as much out of place here as would be patent ice machines at the north pole or warming pans at the equator.

Although we have not had a flake of snow this winter, if a person from the North and who had never been in a cotton growing country was to be set down on any of the side walks around the Public Square in this place on one of these moonlight nights, he would think the streets were covered with snow, as they look so white; but if he were to pick up some of the material he would discover it to be cotton. Now it may be a query with those living in a northern climate how so much cotton comes to be lying on the streets. I will explain. The locality of which I speak is where the cotton brought to market is sold. It is in bales, each bale weighing on an average, five hundred pounds. Some days there are four or five hundred bales on the market; there are perhaps twelve or fifteen buyers; each buyer samples the cotton, and after having examined it he in a great many instances throws it on the ground, and thus it goes on day after day, week after week, during which time thousands of bales have been sampled, and thus it is that so much cotton accumulates on the ground in this locality.

But the clock striking warns me that it is midnight, and time to retire, therefore I bring this letter to a close, trusting that you and your patrons had a Merry Christmas. I hope you all will enjoy a Happy New Year.

"MICHIGAN AND ITS RESOURCES."

The act passed by the Legislature last summer, "for the purpose of encouraging immigration to Michigan," has began to bear fruit. In pursuance of the act Commissioner Morely has prepared and just completed a pamphlet in which he has embodied a careful, accurate and, as far as possible, full statement of the resources of the State and of attractions it presents to foreigners and the residents of other States asking for homes.

This pamphlet is a mine of interesting information and much of its contents will be new to the people of Michigan as to those for whose enlightenment it has been especially prepared. Some of the interesting facts are: The State is the ninth in the order of population; it is larger than either Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana or Illinois. It has a coast line of 1,600 miles and its northern boundery is the largest body of fresh water in the world; the second largest its western, and, except these two, there are no lakes in Europe, Asia or America larger than that which washes its eastern borders. It has ports on two others. Lying in the embrace of these immense seas, its climate has no equal in the moderation of its temperature in any State or territory situated on the same degrees of latitude east of the Rocky Mountains. Most of the southern peninsula lies between the same lines of latitude as the State of New York. The shore line of its upper peninsula on Lake Superior is mostly south of the latitude of Quebec. No part of the State is as far north as Paris. It has 4,000 miles of railroad, and these are so well distributed that only seven of the sixty-seven county seats in the lower peninsula are without outlet by rail or water, and not one of these twenty miles distant from a railroad.

Michigan stands first among the States in the growth and manufacture of lumber, in salt, in copper, and in its fresh water fisheries. It is second in iron and fourth in wheat. It has the largest iron mine and the largest copper mine in the world.—Seven-tenths of all the wheat raised in the country is grown in nine states, and only three excel Michigan in this crop. It is one of the best fruit producing States in the Union, and ranks among the highest in the yield of wool. The reports of the United States department of Agriculture show that in a series of five years, previous to and including 1879, the average cash value per acre of eight leading productions of the farm, taken together, in twelve of the principal farming States of the Union, was greater in Michigan than in any other State, and a map which accompanies Commissioner Morley's pamphlet shows that wheat can be grown successfully and profitably in every county of the State.

The school system is on a broad and generous foundation, and furnishes education free to all.

The State is practically free from debt, the resources of the sinking fund being ample to extinguish every dollar of its obligations as soon as they mature. Its public buildings are paid for. The rate of taxation is low and there are several millions of unoccupied farming lands suitable to almost every variety of husbandry, some of them open to settlement under United States and State homestead laws, and all of them within reach of moderate means.

These facts, and more, are presented not merely in a summary, but wherever that is appropriate, in tabular and detailed form. There is a very interesting detailed showing, for instance, as to the county and municipal indebtedness, the aggregate of which for the whole State is less than $10,000,000, a fact which will be new to most Michigan people, and which was furnished to Commissioner Morley in advance of the official publication by Special Agent Porter of the Census Bureau. The full meaning of this fact can best be appreciated by a comparison which the Commissioner makes with the States of New York, New Jersey and Ohio. This comparison shows that the amount of local debt per capita in Ohio is $13.96; in New Jersey, $47.59; in New York, $48.93; and in Michigan only $5.71.—When the comparison is made on the basis of property valuation, the result is equally striking in favor of Michigan. In Ohio the amount of local debt per dollar of property valuation is two and eight-tenths cents; in New York eight and nine-tenths cents; in New Jersey ten and three-tenths cents; while in Michigan it is only one cent and one-tenth. It is worth nothing in this connection that these facts as to municipal indebtedness in Michigan should have been accessible at some point in the State. If investors could by inquiry at some public office in Lansing learn at any time the gross amount of the municipal indebtedness of the State and of the several municipalities they would comprehend better the value of Michigan securities and be even more favorably disposed toward them than they are now.—Detroit Free Press.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

The Unusual Experience of a Prominent Man Made Public.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is here all re-published entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting.

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIR:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive influences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that to-day thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought it was nothing; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times neuralgic pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon me. Candidly, I thought I was suffering from Malaria, and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled in the bottom. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally become accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible future for all physical neglect, and impending danger usually brings a person to his senses even though it may then be too late. I realized, at last, my critical condition and aroused myself to overcome it. And, oh! now how hard I tried! I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the prominent mineral springs in America and travelled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, nervous prostration; another, malaria; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of all of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during all of which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders—the little twigs of pain had grown to oaks of agony. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a torture to myself and friends. I could retain no food upon my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell upon the floor, convulsively clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitary hiccoughs constantly. My urine was filled with tube casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys in its last stages.

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation he mentioned a remedy of which I had heard much but had never used. Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures which had come under his observation, by means of this remedy, and urged me to try it. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I cherished the prejudice both natural and common with all regular practitioners, and derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice and try the remedy he so highly recommended. I began its use on the first day of June and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was able to retain my food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity. I also determined that I would give a course of lectures in the Corinthian Academy of Music of this city, stating in full the symptoms and almost hopelessness of my disease and the remarkable means by which I have been saved. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of Kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's Disease has no distinctive symptoms of its own, (indeed, it often developes without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity,) but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of their number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such are supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known as I am throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I am prepared to produce and truths which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences.

Heretofore the Wood Binder company have been unable to supply all their customers, but their increased facilities will now enable them to furnish all machines wanted.

THE Fifth annual meeting of the "Franklin Sheep Breeders' and Wool Growers' Association" will be held at Tuttle's Hall, on Friday evening, Jan. 20th, 1882, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before said meeting. As a large number of registered sheep have, during the past year, been added to the flocks of our members, and the general high prices paid by western men for old stock, it is expected there will be a good turn out and general interest manifested. All are cordially invited to attend.

E. L. MILLS, Sec.

THE dance at the Opera House last Thursday evening was a decided success. The fact that the music was furnished by Milversted's Toledo orchestra is sufficient commendation of that part of the programme. The attendance was large enough to make a very pleasant company, and a goodly party came over from Adrian—about 30 couple—on a special car, among whom were Mayor Navin and other city officials. The visit of our Adrian friends was quite unexpected but they were none the less welcome. The committee in charge obtained sufficient receipts to meet expenses, so that the party was a financial as well as a social success.

A SENSATIONAL article is going the rounds of the newspapers reflecting upon the character of Rev. Dr. Fulton, of Brooklyn. People who enjoy a personal acquaintance with Dr. Fulton will take no stock in such nonsense. Silly slanders of this kind are most effectually answered by silent contempt.

THE Adrian board of trade seems to have caught cold. It was ushered into existence last September with a flourish of newspaper talk and an initiation fee of two dollars for each member. Very soon after the organization, a quarrel arose as to the disposition of these fees, and from that date to the present, interest in the institution has been on the wane. At their meeting Tuesday evening seven members put in an appearance and then adjourned.

The Detroit News says the banks are making a good thing out of punctured coin. "Having caused a report to spread to the effect that the enormous discounts charged on such money was by authority of the government, the sons of Shylock scoop it in less this discount and then sell it for bullion at a price which is but a tithe less than the face value of the battered, punched or clipped tokens."

ON Sunday night, as the Adrian firemen were responding to an alarm of fire, they attempted to take water from a reservoir near Broad street M. E. church, and a lad named Riley Force fell into it. The reservoir was 20 feet deep, 22 feet in diameter, and contained 15 feet of water, and of course was as dark as a blind negro. Clark Aldrich, one of the steamer company, bravely plunged in and saved the lad, though he had a hard time doing it.

A few days ago a Hudson butcher, leading a cow to the slaughter over the road near the bridge, was greatly astonished and amazed when the cow suddenly disappeared through a washout under the road. It was then seen that the river had swept behind an abutment and gouged out a dangerous hole. It were better thus than that one of Hudson's citizens should have been precipitated with fatal results, unprepared as any one of them would have been.

THE North American Review will present in its February number, to be published on the 15th of the present month, Part III. of its series of articles on "The Christian Religion." It will be from the pen of Geo. P. Fisher, the eminent professor of ecclesiastical history in the Yale Divinity School,—as thorough a scholar and as able a defender of the Christian faith as this country affords. A powerful presentation of the claims of Christianity is expected.

THERE is a good deal of sense in the suggestion of an exchange that in a station house along the lines of railways, there should, in cold weather especially, be loose chairs in the rooms assigned to the ladies. Not a few ladies arrive at the station long before the train starts, and frequently they have cold or wet feet. If they stand before one of the tall, red-hot stoves in order to dry or warm their feet, their faces are likely to be scorched. If they had chairs, and men were not allowed to use them, they could sit far enough away from the stove to save their faces, and at the same time could put their feet toward the heat.

Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Forrestal.

Hudson Post: In Hillsdale County the board of examiners for school teachers have accommodated the people living in the various parts of the county, by holding sessions for the examination of teachers at such places outside the county seat as Litchfield, North Adams and Camden. In Monroe county the board have met at Dundee, Carlton and Samaria as well as in the city of Monroe. But in Lenawee county every school marm in the county thus far has been obliged to go to Adrian to get the necessary certificate. Why is this thusly?

Not Open to that Objection,

Temperance people often say that most of the popular medicines they see advertised are nine-tenths rum.—That is true of many, but not of Dr. David Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy.' The Dr. agrees with his temperance friends that it is better to die of disease than of drink. "Favorite Remedy" cures Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Costipation of the Bowels, as nothing else does or ever did.—It drives away sickness. It cools the blood. It costs only a Dollar to try it. Ask your Druggist or send to the Doctor at Rondout, N. Y.

Matrimonial.

We received too late for our issue of last week the marriage notice of Chas. R. Campbell, of Franklin, and Miss Rosa A. Teachout, of Tecumseh. Rosa's home has been since early childhood in the family of P. C. Mills, of this village, and by her many good traits of character and warm heartedness she has gained a large place, not only in the esteem of the family but among her associates in this village. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are passing the winter with their daughter, Mrs. H. M. Pomeroy of Adrian, and for that reason gave the wedding party there. A very pleasant gathering of friends was present to assist the young couple in launching their bark on the untried sea of matrimony, and all united in wishing them a hearty bon voyage. Many appropriate and handsome presents were made to the bride by members of the family and other friends. The young people have our warmest congratulations.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Mr. & Mrs. Luke Wood Almost Suffocated by Coal Gas.

Last Tuesday morning Mr. & Mrs. Luke Wood of this village had a narrow escape from a terrible death. They occupy a house of there own on Logan st. and live alone, their being no other person in the family. About nine o'clock Tuesday morning a female book agent called there and went to the back door, which was found locked. She heard heavy snoring inside and this aroused her fears, so the neighbors were called. Upon entering the house they found Mr. & Mrs. Wood on the bed, and nearly suffocated with coal gas. Mr. Wood had evidently got up early in the morning and put some coal in the stove, as he was found with his pants on. A small lump of coal was found under the lid which left sufficient opening to allow the escape of gas. Dr. House was immediately summoned and Mrs. Wood was soon restored to consciousness. It was several hours however before Mr. Wood regained his senses, and he is still in a critical condition, although his physician thinks he will recover.

DIED.

HIALEY.—In Tecumseh, on Thursday, Jan. 5th, 1882, of lung fever, Louie, youngest child of John R. and Mary A. Hialey, aged 9 months and 9 days.

SHERMAN—In Tecumseh, Hiram Sherman, of Angina Pectoris, on Monday, Jan. 2d, 1882.

He had long been an invalid and had made a struggle with disease for years. He was born in Monroe, Mich. in 1808. He married in 1832. Nearly his whole life had been spent in Michigan. He united with the M. E. Church after accepting the religion of Christ in 1838, and remained a faithful member till his death. He was a good man, possessed a kind heart and living an upright life. Had he lived till November next he and his bereaved companion would have celebrated their golden wedding. He leaves an adopted daughter. They are all seperated for a time. He died in full hope of immortality. He lived for that and was ready for the summons which came at last quite suddenly. He has gone to be with His Lord. So one by one the old land-marks linking us to the early history of the State are removed.

R. S. P.

HOUSE—In Tecumseh, Mrs. Ella, wife of R. B. House, M. D., on Wednesday, Jan 4th, 1882.

Mrs House was born in Jonesville, Mich., in 1849. She was the daughter of Dr. Jones of Brooklyn, M. She was married to her now bereaved husband in 1869. In 1872 they removed to Tecumseh where she resided till her death. She had been for years in delicate health and at last fell a victim to consumption. She was led to accept the religion of Christ in 1854 and in 1865 she united with the M. E. church and remained a consistent member till her death. She was emphatically a good woman. Her convictions of truth were always positive and she never lacked the courage to assert them. Her intellect was well stored with knowledge. She was a great lover of books and read very extensively. She was a member of the "Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle" keeping up her studies and reporting her progress until failing health forbade her doing it longer.

She took an active interest in all church and temperance work. She was a valued member of the different benevolent societies and highly appreciated for her counsels and prayers. She leaves a husband and two little boys, a father, mother and brother, and a wide circle of friends and the church of which she was a member to mourn their loss. But their loss is her gain. She died peacefully "as dies a wave along the shore" bidding those about her adieu, saying to all "a good bye." She died as a christian dies in full assurance of eternal rest.

Her funeral [illegible] and was consisted by [illegible] dress was [illegible] "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His [illegible]"

AYER & SON'S MANUAL

Performances with Mouth and Feet.

The following is extracted from the "Diary of John Ross" (Camden Society) p. 84: "Some years since I saw in Holborn, London, near the bridge, an Italian, who with his mouth did lay certain sheets of paper together, one upon another, lengthwise, between the right hand and the left; and then he took a needle and pricked it through the one end, and so then the other, so that the paper lay safe. Then he took a short text pen, and dipped it in a standish ink-horn of lead, and therewith wrote Louis The Kaiser, in a very fair text hand, not written with his hand, but with his mouth. Then with another pen he formed fourfly about those letters in divers forms. He did, with his mouth, also take up a needle and thread, pricking the needle right down, out of which he pulled the thread, and took another, by (litter) and put it into the needle. Then, therewith he took three stitches in the cloth with a linen wheel prepared with a turner's device for the foot. He did spin with his mouth. He wrote fair with his left foot. He used a pencil and pounded with his mouth. He took a pretty piece of gun with his toes, and poured in a paper of powder, pulled out the scouring stick very nimbly, rammed in the powder, put up the stick, pulled up the cock with his toes; then another short piece charged, that had a Swedish firelock, being put in his mouth by another man, he held it forth and discharged it, and forthwith with his toes he discharged the other. He gathered up four or five dice with his foot, and threw them out neatly. His hands were both shrinked and lame."

Degeneracy of Sport.

"Sport" is getting to be more and more disreputable. There is too much uncertain cloudiness. It is hardly necessary to refer to the tendency of prize fights to taper off into fizzles and funks. There is perpetual quarreling upon race courses, and even the innocent matches at base ball and cricket give rise to multitudinous growlings about unfair play. All decent people will be glad that prize fighting has rushed to a swift degeneration; but it seems hard that competitions which might be innocent and in some indirect way useful, should lapse into mere money-making schemes. Moral people will say that it all comes of the betting; and the question therefore obtrudes itself whether we cannot have athletic contests without the curse of betting. Apparently we cannot. Perhaps the students bet upon the result of the Olympic games, but from what we know of them they seem to have been engaged in for the sake of honor. "Sport" on the turf, on the river, or in the ring, has degenerated into mere money-making. The rest follows as a matter of course. If a pedestrian can gain cash by losing a match he will be likely to lose it. If there be pecuniary profit in selling a race, it will be sold. One feels that this ought to be different among amateurs, who are presumably gentlemen; but still there is as much squabbling with them as with professionals. Unless there is a general reform, the issue is evident. There will soon be no more "sport" having the slightest claim to respectability.

An Important Work.

Somewhere about 3,000 workmen, 600 or 700 wagons, 170 or 18 locomotive engines, 3 steam "navvies" and a great quantity of minor machinery of various kinds were engaged from 1855 to 1860 at the southeast end of London in a work compared with which the building of the pyramids—with modern appliances—would have been no signal feat. Previously the one entrance to the Victoria docks from the Thames had been at Blackwell Point, but now there is a dock capable of receiving all vessels no matter what they might be. Three and a half miles of walls were built, enclosing 90 acres of water. These walls are 40 feet high, 5 feet thick at the top and 18 feet to 19 feet thick at the bottom, the whole of this enormous mass being composed of solid concrete, for which 80,000 tons of Portland cement was used. Some 4,000,000 cubic feet of earth was dug out. It may assist the imagination somewhat to state that if it were filled into ordinary carts, the vehicles would form an unbroken line 7,000 miles long. The excavations went through a submerged forest, and among other curiosities dug out were a reindeer's horn, a Roman vase, and what is supposed to be an ancient British canoe carved out of solid oak. The latter is now in the British museum. The new entrance below Woolwich gives about 3½ miles of river navigation, which, in the case of vessels of heavy draught, is, of course, a matter of great importance. The London and St. Katherine's and Victoria Docks Company are now prepared for vessels of all kinds, not excluding the largest ironclads of the British navy. The cost was about £1,600,000.

Lincoln and Lord Hartington.

The Marquis of Hartington was traveling in this country during the war, and was there made a semi-official call on the president Lincoln. He was introduced to honest old Abe in the white house, with some ceremony, but Mr. Lincoln grasped the hand of the marquis with his broad hand, closed a grip on it that brought the tears to the Englishman's eyes, and said in a cheery voice: "Glad to see you, Marquis of Hartington. Shall never forget you, because your name resembles what I come to regret, a great deal—Mrs. Partington. How are you marquis" and he gave Hartington another spell; after which he led off the executive chamber, rubbing his hand and his tender, declaring to a friend that "Your American prince pinch like a bear."

The secret of the president's action was that the marquis had appeared at a ball in New York a few nights before his visit to Washington, and ostentatiously wore the rebel colors in his button-hole. The incident was published, and the president, knowing the marquis was to call at the white house, concluded to give the haughty but ill-bred Englishmen a pinch to cure that he would get through even his bull-hide. And he did.

An exchange inquires: "What shall we do at table?" Why, eat, man, eat, of course. It wouldn't be just the thing to play ball, or shoot at a mark, or do anything of that kind, and we don't see much left to do but to eat. Suppose you try eating, anyway, at first.

Breaking the Golden Rule.

Richard Grant White discusses interestingly, in the New York Times, the dispositions of certain persons to be uncharitable in speech and actions towards others with whom they have no relationship, and who have never done them the slightest injury, oftentimes not being acquainted by sight. He says:

"The cause of such enmity is one of the mysteries of human nature. Such enmity would seem to evidence that in some hearts there is a spring of spontaneous malignity. There is an offense known to the law as malicious mischief, by which term is meant those injuries, generally to property, which are done apparently without any other motive than that of a wanton desire to do mischief to others. And these offences are often committed by those who would not readily be guilty of a serious crime, or even of a sin. A woman who would not steal a dollar or a yard of silk will, in mere malice, ruin another woman's silk gown, if she can do so with, as she thinks, no chance of being found out. The other woman may not have done her a wrong; but for some reason unknown to herself, perhaps even unacknowledged, she hates her, and it is gall to her to see that woman handsomely apparelled.

The philosophy of much of this embitterment he suggests in this paragraph:

"In a word, envy, sheer envy, makes active, malignant enemies. Vanity wounded, not through intention, but by the mere successful display of superior abilities, rankles into hatred. It is essential that success should attend the manifestations of superiority; for, nothing is so grateful to some minds, nothing balms so soothingly upon some souls, as the knowledge that a man whose strength they feel, but do not acknowledge, has made a vain effort to rise above their own level of mediocrity.

Success of a person, in the same strata of society with a detractor, to a degree exceeding that of the offender, might also be mentioned as a prompting to violence of words and deeds. Jealousy of another's good fortune has its illustration all about us—some very amusing at times, others equally sad. We all know such cases."

The Results of Necessity.

What the ancients suffered for the want of knowledge in medical science, can only be appreciated by contrasting the vast amount of suffering cured and pain alleviated in modern times, by the use of Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases. Its introduction was characterized by the necessity with a drawer of a score or more of illusive quack nostrums, whose evil effects have left living monuments to denounce them. Thus is exemplified the proverb, Necessity is the mother of Invention.

Brilliant Whitewash.

Take half a bushel of nice unslacked lime, slack it with boiling water, cover it during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer, and add to it a peck of salt, previously well dissolved in warm water; three pounds of ground rice, boiled to a thin paste, and stirred in boiling hot; half a pound of powdered Spanish whiting, and a pound of clean glue, which has been previously dissolved by soaking it well, and then hanging it over a slow fire, in a small kettle within a large one filled with water. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir it well, and let it stand a few days covered from the dirt.

It should be put on right hot; for this purpose it can be kept in a kettle on a portable furnace. It is said about a pint of this mixture will cover a square yard upon the outside of a house if properly applied. Brushes more or less small may be used according to the neatness of the job required. It answers as well as oil paint for wood. It retains its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it, either for inside or outside walls.

Coloring matter may be put in and made of any shade you like. Spanish brown stirred in will make red pink, more or less deep according to the quantity. A delicate tinge of this is pretty, for inside walls. Finely pulverized common clay, well mixed with Spanish brown, make a reddish stone color. Yellow ochre stirred in makes yellow wash, but chrome goes further, and makes a color generally esteemed prettier. In all these cases the darkness of the shades is determined, of course, by the quantity of coloring used. It is a great sport to make rules because tastes are different, and it would be best to try experiments on a shingle and let it dry. We have been told that green must not be mixed with lime. The lime destroys the color, and the color has an effect on the whitewash, which makes it crack and peel. When well, houses are badly smoked, and you wish them a clean white, it is well to squeeze indigo plentifully through a bag into the water you use, before it is stirred in the whole mixture. If a larger quantity than five gallons be wanted, the same proportion should be observed.

A Foolish Mistake.

Don't make a mistake of confounding a remedy of merit with quack medicines. We speak from experience when we say that Parker's Ginger Tonic is a sterling health restorative which will do all that is claimed for it. We have used it ourselves with the happiest results for Rheumatism and when worn out by overworks. See body—times.

That every man should regulate his actions by his own conscience, without any regard to the opinions of the rest of the world, is one of the precepts of moral prudence; justified not only by the suffrage of reason, which declares that none of the gifts of heaven are to be careless, but by the voice likewise of experience, which will soon inform us that, if we make the praise or blame of others the rule of our conduct, we shall be distracted by a boundless variety of irreconcilable judgments, be held in perpetual suspense between contrary impulses, and consult forever without determination.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independence, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua, Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad which owns and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road-bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Recognizing the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L. S. & M. S., and P. Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

Stone in the Bladder Expelled by Using Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Duchess Co. N.Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the latter advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., for, he said, "I owe my life to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Which had worked so successfully in the father's case, Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it, he passed a stone ⅞ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here lies sick man healed! What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

The Grand Rapids Democrat says that there is in the Montcalm county poor house a man from Grand Rapids who was worth $15,000 or $20,000 a few years ago; but he was not satisfied, so he took a trip to California, where he lost most of his wealth, and when he came back his wife had disappeared with all that he had left in Michigan. Trouble deranged his mind and he wandered about, and finally went to the poor house where he has had a home for the last two years. He is well educated, can speak five or six languages, is quiet and peaceable and a great worker.

Man a Fighting Animal.

Do what we will with him, man is naturally a fighting animal. There is a curious autobiography to be found in Southern bookshops, written by an old hunter about a century ago. There is the same thirst for blood and fierce love of the chase in it as if a beast of prey or grayhound were telling its story. The most amusing example is where the old man tells how he and his sons once trained some young dogs to hunt bears. "I put on the skin of an old bear," he says, "and crawled on all fours, while Elisha and Job drove the pups on. They were cared at first, but presently the whole six attacked me furiously, bit my calves, tore my hair, hung on my ears. I began to shout 'Enough!' but Elisha cried, 'Don't, dad, don't! It's the life of the pups.' He adds, 'Of course I staid. I had consideration for the dogs.' It takes a great deal of training to root out this instinct from men who inherit it. Everybody knows the history of the fighting Quakers during the revolutionary war. Many of the staid sons of staid sires of the same faith slipped out of meeting during the last war to shoulder a musket. One venerable old friend in Germantown, Pa., found that three of his sons had gone to this conflict against which his creed arrayed him. The youngest felt that he, too, must go, but fearing to tell his family, he took his gun one day and began to clean it, placing himself in his father's way. The old gentleman saw him and paced slowly up and down, but said nothing. Presently he approached the young man. "Charles," he said, deliberately, "if the devil has made thee feel that thee need one of these worldly instruments spare not thy money, but get the best." Alexander Campbell, the most combative of Scotch reformers and theologians, once submitted his head to the fingers of a phrenologist, who had no knowledge of Mr. Campbell's calling. The man finished his examination with the words: "From your executive ability and love of fighting, sir, you are or ought to be a great soldier." The aged clergyman heaved a sigh, "No sir, no. Circumstances were against me. But according to my opportunity, I've done what I could—I've done what I could."

Quakers of Long Age.

A record book of monthly meetings held by Virginia Friends of Henrico county from 1699—only eight years after the death of George Fox, the founder of the society—to 1759, now owned in Richmond, contains many interesting entries. It began with a report of a business meeting held to raise money for putting up a house to worship in, and at which it was ordered that of the tobacco crop raised that year, 5,050 pounds should be assessed on the members and paid over to the builders. The structure was to be "30 foot 6 long and 20 foot wide;" and at another meeting an assessment of 1,700 pounds of tobacco was made to pay the expenses of ceiling this meeting house with river boards and making and hanging the doors. No record is made of the spot where the house stood, and every trace of it has disappeared. The clerk in whose hand the first records are written was Joseph Pleasants, believed to be a son of John Pleasants, who came from England and settled under a grant from the King in 1666. A portion of the grant is still in the possession of a member of the family, who now lives on it, and it has been owned by the Pleasants continuously for 214 years. The record book contains no instances of litigation, all disputes have been decided by arbitration. When the differences arose they were laid before the monthly meeting, which named a committee of "discreet men" who acted as a referred court, to which the case was taken for argument and decision. In no case mentioned in the book did their verdict fail to obtain agreement from both parties to dispute.

Suicide in France.

The most recently published figures show that suicide is on the increase in France. Before the German-Franco war the average number of suicices only slightly exceeded five thousand a year, and now they exceed six thousand. The increase in the rate directly after the war was generally noticed, but was not considered extraordinary considering the public and private disasters suffered during the time hostilities lasted and, indeed, afterward; but now, many years after the war, there are no symptons of a diminution. Dr. Decaisne, who has written at some length on the subject, says that in Paris there are three times as many suicides as in the country; that most of the men who destroy themselves are bachelors; that spring is the time of year when suicides are most frequent, and that death by hanging is more frequently resorted to than any other mode of self destruction, being considered the most expeditious. Some statistics published before the fall of the empire revealed some curious facts. Thus, the yearly number of suicides among men of good education averaged 440; among men who could read and write well, 600; among men who could read, but not spell correctly 1,000; among men who could neither read nor write, 1; among persons of no instruction, 36. Again it was found that more persons in easy circumstances committed the crime than persons without any visible means of subsistence.

The Dangers of the Stock Market.

A man may be incredulous enough to risk his money in the fickle mysteries of a mercurial stock market, but when he gets the Itching Piles, he goes straight for Dr. Swayne's Ointment. Unlike the Bulls and Bears of the Stock Exchange, who clean you out of hard earned cash, it returns your money with interest, in the way of allaying the intense itching, and insuring sweet repose.

RATIONAL LIVING.—Thousands of people might be enjoying reasonable lives with opportunities for self culture, for social enjoyment, and for charitable efforts, whose whole energy is absorbed in the desperate struggle to secure superfluities to comfort.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.—[Addison.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The Farmers' Social Club met at J. W. Benedict's Jan. 6th. There was a full house which speaks well for the success of the Club, when we consider the very rough roads.

The program was introduced by singing. Kittie Griswold read "Mrs. Giles' Tea Party," which caused much merriment.

Vocal and instrumental music by Rhoda Benedict.

Eva Rector's essay upon "Country Schools," was well received.

Frank and Rhoda Benedict's music upon the violin and piano was very fine.

The question "When is the best time to plant our clover seed, and what way," was introduced by R. B. Gillispie.

He had great difficulty with the success dragging than sowing early. He thought he had, but had no success in sowing late without draging.

Mr. Benedict had always endeavored to keep his land seeded with clover and had sowed but little other grass seed. He usually sows early before the frost is out. He had never dragged any in but had been very successful in sowing early. He thinks those living on the sand might find it profitable to sow later and drag in.

Mr. DePuy was a visitor and had not expected to speak upon the subject, but thought the way to learn was to exchange views. His plan is to sow the first of April when it freezes nights; always follows this plan and is successful. Thinks the frost does not hurt the clover, but the dry weather is what kills it. He sowed one year as late as May and had good success.

Mr. A. G. Hall has had many failures and has planted at all seasons.—Thinks a good way is to plow under ripe clover, sow to wheat, then stubble in, and the result will be a good catch of clover. He thinks clover is not generally planted deep enough, and that the season had more to do with failures than the seed.

Mr. Griswold has been puzzled more with his clover than any other crop. He has sown his clover and timothy in the fall once or twice and succeeded well. Sowed one piece in this way last fall and it looks well at present. He thinks it is not the frost that injures young clover, but the dry weather in April or May, so he has come to the conclusion that the late sowing is the most successful. Thinks on sandy soil the ground should be dragged twice, once before sowing the seed and once after, as in this way a good deal of seed might be saved which is otherwise lost.

Mr. Horton's experience had shown that the early seeding is the best. He sows in February or March and does not believe the frost hurts the clover, but thinks it is the dry weather that hurts it before it has root enough. He always sows on a light snow if possible and does not care for a still day but prefers some wind; thinks dragging the wheat after seeding is beneficial. He had sown as early as January and had good success.

Mr. R. R. Hall had tried nearly all ways, sowing early and late, with dragging and without; thinks failure is liable in any way. He had thought of experimenting in this way, increase the quantity of seed and sow half in the fall and the other half in the spring, or sow half early and the rest late, hoping in this way to save at least a part of the seed. He recommends sowing timothy with the clover.

The following is the program for next meeting:

[illegible] without opposition, therefore he was requested to follow Mr. A. G. Hall on the negative.

Club adjourned to meet at "Uncle John" Rector's Friday evening, Jan. 20th, 1882.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

So great is the dissatisfaction with Speaker Keifer's selection of his committees, that it is pretty certain that the speaker henceforth will be shorn of his appointing power and the method of the senate, in selecting committees, be introduced into the house.

LEGISLATIVE ELECTION LEGALIZED.

The president has signed the act to legalize the election of a territorial legislature of New Mexico, held Nov. 2, 1880.

THE MISSION INDIANS.

Judge Davis, president pro tem. of the senate, on Saturday presented to that body the resolutions of the general association of the Congregational church of California, urging recognition of the rights of the mission Indians of southern California, and they were referred to the committee on Indian affairs.

SARGENT.

President Arthur's purpose to make ex-Senator Sargent secretary of the interior has not in the least been shaken by the various newspapers attacks on him, and his nomination will be sent to the senate on or before the first day of February. That date was agreed upon some time ago as the one when Secretary Kirkwood's resignation and Sargent's appointment would be most convenient and agreeable for all parties concerned, and there is unquestionable authority for stating that, although it may now possibly be hastened, it will certainly not be postponed.

THE JEANNETTE SEARCH.

Saulkowski, who went in search of the Jeannette on board the Chasseur, met the U. S. The Strelok, with the Bremen expedition on board, then returned to Chinese ports, having previously accompanied the Rodgers in the search. An American schooner, having on board the captain of a stranded whaler, had joined them in Providence bay.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

A caucus of members of the house from the Mississippi valley has been proposed for the purpose of considering means to procure legislation for the improvement of the Mississippi river. The Missouri delegation met on Monday, and requested delegations from other states in the Mississippi valley to join them in caucus, without regard to politics. It is asserted that the majority of the commerce committee are inimical to Mississippi river improvement, and the object of this movement is to take from that committee jurisdiction over that subject. The idea is to get a special committee on the subject. The members from the valley say they are determined to have appropriations at this session, that there is no politics in their purpose, but that members of all parties from the valley are in accord on the question.

GUITEAU.

No visitors were allowed to see Guiteau Sunday. Gen. Crocker was firm in his refusals to allow the assassin to be disturbed. His cell was littered with papers, and he was occupied most of the day in preparing a closing speech for his defense. This effort, he says, will be the greatest of his life, and will settle the verdict in his favor. He was in an ugly temper. The warden said he was never so surly before. Even when fruits were sent in by sympathizers he replied, rather gruffly, that he was obliged.

Nothing further has been heard of the first offer to purchase his body, but a postal was received from the Dime museum in Baltimore, proposing to pay $1,000 for the embalmed carcass of the assassin. The usual mail was received for Guiteau. Pieces of rope, suggestive of his final end, are never shown him. Scoville will resume his argument to-morrow morning. It will probably occupy the greater portion of the day.

PLUMB AND DEFREES.

Public Printer Defrees recently sent a communication to Senator Plumb, of Kansas, asking if a certain newspaper account of an alleged interview was true. Plumb replied, saying he declined to be drawn into a newspaper controversy. Defrees then wrote Plumb an open letter, in which he says: "No one asked you to engage in a newspaper controversy. You were simply requested to say 'Yes' or 'No' to a question I had a right to ask. Your refusal to answer it is a confession of your guilt. No one reading your notes can doubt the fact that you prompted the publication of the paragraph. You thus stand before all honorable men self-convicted of having falsely boasted that you had grossly insulted without cause, and in a manner becoming the lowest blackguard, a man almost thirty years older than yourself. I am very sure those acquainted with me will regard the paragraph as a lie on its face, as they know that I do not cringe to anyone, and that such an insult would have been resented by me on the spot."

THE GARFIELD BILLS.

The house committee to consider the accounts of the late president's physicians, is disposed to treat the matter in a purely business way, and act as they would in settlement of any estate. Others feel that the government should "do the handsome thing," as the phrase is, and pay the bills rather as an advertisement of national generosity than as a reasonable compensation for actual service rendered. The doctors are disposed to occupy high-toned ground and leave their claims to the liberality of Congress. Mr. Springer, however, proposes that all persons connected with the sickness put in itemized bills, sworn to in the ordinary way, together with affidavits that the compensation charged is proper and usual. He also wishes that all such persons waive any claim on the Garfield estate by presenting their bills before the committee. Otherwise the result might be held over congress that unless a handsome provision be made subsequent calls would be made on the estate. If congress once favors a blind generosity there is no telling where the expenditure will stop. Not only the doctors, but nurses, attendants, railroads, inventors, and everybody in any way however remotely connected with the illness will throw themselves on the liberality of the nation, refusing to hand in bills, but making their claims debts of honor. Many of these persons have more or less political influence, and the whole thing would be likely to end in a wrangle and scandal. The proper way, Mr. Springer thinks, is to make the matter one purely of business.

INSANITY.

In the House Mr. Springer, on Monday, introduced a very important measure, defining the law of insanity in criminal cases in the United States courts. The test of the measure is substantially in the language of that distinguished jurist, Davis Dudley Field. It is as follows:

A bill defining the law of insanity in criminal cases.

Be it enacted, etc.: SEC. 1. That no person indicted in the District of Columbia, or in any territory of the United States, or in any court of the United States, shall be acquitted on the ground of insanity, under which designation is to be included idiocy, lunacy, or other unsoundness of mind, except upon proof that at the time of committing the offense charged he was laboring under such a defect of reason as either, first, not to know the nature or quality of the act he was doing, or second, not to know the act was unlawful or wrong.

SEC. 2. A morbid propensity to commit prohibited acts existing in the mind of a person, who is not shown to have been incapable of knowing the unlawfulness or wrongfulness of such acts shall form no defense to a prosecution therefor.

SEC. 3. Whenever upon the trial of an indictment in any court of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or in any of the territories, the jury shall find the defendant not guilty, they shall at the request of the prosecuting attorney state whether they acquit the defendant on the ground of insanity, and if they answer affirmatively, the statement shall be entered in the minutes of the trial, and the court shall expect the defendant to be committed to an asylum or hospital for the insane, to be kept in close custody until discharged in due course of law.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

FRANKLIN.

Social at E. Le Mills' Thursday, Jan. 26.

Free Hunter has returned home, having completed his course.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kemp have been visiting Mrs. K.'s sister, Mrs. Burtless, at Napoleon.

Many farmers are improving what little sleighing there is by drawing logs to the mill.

We had the pleasure of greeting Prof. A. H. Lewrie last Sabbath. He preached in the morning and delivered a temperance lecture in the evening. Subject "Effect of intemperance on letter and law."

James Osborn and Frank Leonard have returned from Allegan county where they have been in search of farms. They report land worth from one to one hundred dollars per acre.—A good farm costs as much there as in old Lenawee.

Albert Kemp who has lain ill for many months from a complication of diseases passed away on Sunday evening, Jan. 8th. Mr. Kemp has been a great sufferer all through his sickness. The funeral services were held on the Tuesday following, Rev. A. W. Wilson officiating.

The entertainment last Friday evening was a success, although Miss Butrick was laboring under rather painful circumstances. She had taken cold and it settled in her throat, but had partially recovered so she concluded not to disappoint her audience, but to her sorrow as she has suffered quite severely from the effect. They had plenty of good music to relieve her occasionally. At the close the society extended a vote of thanks to the participants.

HOLLOWAY.

Regina Billmeyer is teaching in the Kelly district.

Butler Holloway is improving a little.

The Presbyterian church society will give a parlor concert on Friday evening, Jan. 20, at the house of Mr. Alexander Richard. A good supper will be furnished by the ladies, the proceeds of which are to be used in paying for the new organ. This is the first attempt at anything of this kind but we have no doubt of its success.

The literary society met as usual last Saturday eve., and carried out the following program:

Inst. solo—M. D. Billmeyer.
Rec.—Jennie Anthony.
Dec.—Spencer Lester.
Essay—Mary Billmeyer.
Vocal duet—Libbie Richards, Dora Anthony.
Debate—Question, Resolved, That the military acadamy at West Point should be abolished.
Aff.—A. Richards.
Neg.—W. Chatfield, M. D. Billmeyer.
Vocal solo—Libbie Richards.
" " —W. E. Doty.

The question for next Saturday eve. is Resolved, That boards of trade are injurious to the country, and that gambling in produce should be considered a criminal offense.

The society will hold a "bandanna" social on Friday evening, Jan. 27th, at the house of W. E. Doty. What a bandanna social may be we will not attempt to explain. The best way to satisfy the curiosity will be to attend. At least we may be sure of a good deal of fun and a good supper

J. M. Green has purchased the forty acres of land formerly owned by Wm. Colvin, joining the north side of his farm.

WEST TECUMSEH.

Add one to the rising generation—C. Mead, a boy.

John Smith, who has been on the sick list, is able to be around again.

Geo. Williamson has moved on the farm he purchased of Chas. Brooks, of Clinton.

Let there be a good turnout to the Farmers' Institute to be held at Macon Grange hall on the 2d and 3d of next month.

RIDGEWAY.

Now we have good roads.

E. W. Rappleye offers his house and lot for sale.

T. H. Montgomery had a tip over on the way to church Sunday.

The closing of the Peoples' Bank has caught several families about here, but to what extent is not known yet.

I. S. Osborn has been very sick for the past 10 days. He is however reported better this week.

Stave bolts are coming in lively at Britton now, at the rate of 50 to 75 cords per day.

It is now quite certain that in the spring Britton will be connected with this place by a telegraph or telephone line.

The regular annual church donation is announced for Wednesday evening, Feb. 1st.

Mrs. Laura Cheever, whom we reported very sick with typhoid fever last week, has improved some, but two of her children, James and Louise, are very low with the same disease. Other members of the family have been quite sick but are convalescent.

The January issue of the Journal of the American Agricultural Association, Vol. 2, No. 1.

Will contain a Report on the International Cotton Exposition held at Atlanta, Ga., by Frank H. Norton, late editor of Frank Leslie's publications, author of Frank Leslie's Centennial Register, the most comprehensive report of the Centennial Exposition published; also author of Frank Leslie's report on the Paris Exposition.

This report on the International Cotton Exposition, will be the first complete report published of this great enterprise which embraced not alone Cotton and its products, but the principal features of the great International Expositions of the world. Only those who have visited it can have any conception of its comprehensiveness, and merit. Mr. Norton's report will occupy about seventy-five pages of the Journal, and describe in detail the buildings and exhibits, processes of Cotton growing and manufacture, descriptions of machinery, implements, etc. It will also give a history of the enterprise from its inception to the close on Dec. 31st, 1881, including the addresses delivered, etc., and will alone be worth more to every farmer, capitalist, merchant, manufacturer, and private citizen, than the price of the Journal.

The Journal is free to members of the association, in which the Registration fees and dues for 1882 are $3.00. Address, J. H. Reall, Secretary and Editor, 127 Water St., New York.

CIRCUIT COURT.

JAN. 17.—Circuit court for Lenawee county convened at ten o'clock this morning at the court house, Judge Howell presiding.

The bar of the county, a great majority of the members being present, arose while the judge addressed a few words of greeting, after which the resolutions adopted by the bar in regard to the retirement of Judge Pratt were ordered spread on the court records by Judge Howell.

Franklin was arraigned, charged with stealing from Graybiel's gallery, to which he pleaded guilty. He will be sentenced to-morrow morning.

The remainder of the forenoon was spent in listening to the call of the calendar.

The jury was discharged until next Tuesday.

MAGAZINE publishers have been in the habit of cutting, by machine, the edges of a part of each month's edition; indeed, as far as expense is concerned, they would be glad to trim the whole, for the waste paper more than pays the cost of cutting. The appearance of the magazine page is, however, seriously impaired by trimming off the margin, and the publishers of The Century have decided to no longer send out cut copies of their periodical. It is said, also, that they have in contemplation a new style of binding the volume, in which the leaves are to remain untrimmed by machine, even when made up in book form. They are preparing for the first volume of The Century a new cover, which for richness and beauty of design is said to be unequalled by any work of the kind heretofore done in this country. The cloth will be of dull gold, and the stamp, in dark reddish brown, will nearly cover its entire surface.

Farmers and Mechanics.

If you wish to avoid great danger and trouble, besides a no small bit of expense, at this season of the year, you should take prompt steps to keep disease from your household. The system should be cleansed, blood purified, stomach and bowels regulated, and prevent and cure diseases arising from Spring malaria. We know of nothing that will so perfectly and surely do this as Electric Bitters, and at the trifling cost of fifty cents a bottle.—Exchange. Sold by

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear—
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers holding yours so tight.
You do not prize the blessing overmuch—
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not say it as I do to-day;
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the music till we have gone away.
And now if some poor heart—as I struggle to see
Your saddened face through the twilight of tears—
Should tell me how, in the years that are to be,
I shall yearn for the touch of these vanished years,

And, if, some night, when you sit down to rest,
You miss the clinging of your little ones' prayer—
This restless, early head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly:
If from your own the clasped hands had slipped,
And never would nestle in yours again—
If the white feet had wandered on paths that pitiless
I could not blame you for your heartsore pain.

I wonder that snow mothers ever fret
[illegible]
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor—
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more,

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world would say
She was more blissfully content than I!
But ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head!
My singing birdling flown its nest has flown—
The little boy I used to kiss is—dead.

GRANDMA'S FIRST BEAU.

"Grandma, old Mrs. Lennox says you were real pretty when you were young," said Lena Lawrence, as she sat by the side of the still comely old lady.

"Much obleeged to Mrs. Lennox," said grandma, with a pleasant laugh, for she was a happy, genial old lady.

"I b'lieve I was considered pretty good-lookin' some fifty years ago.'

"And she said you had lots of beaux. Did you?"

"Well I had my share, child, I reckon," and the faint red in her old cheek grew brighter, "a many and many before I ever saw your grandpa. My first beau—O dear me, how well I remember!" And grandma burst into a hearty laugh that almost brought the tears to her eyes.

"Please tell us all about it?" demanded three or four young voices.

"Well, I s'pose I can if I try. There was a pretty fair boy lived in the next farm-house to ours, 'bout a mile away. His name was Jedediah. He was 'bout seventeen when he first aspired to the honor of my company.'

"I wash I could move sixteen layers of jest out of long aprons, and like girls now-adays. I s'pose, thought lots more about the beaux than I'd ought to."

"One awfully cold night in January, all the family was settin' in the great kitchen, paring apples; when a knock came to the door. Father got up and opened it, when in came Jedediah, all bundled up, with the exception of his nose, which was a peaked one. Father invited him in, an' he soon perched himself on a high chair, and began unwindin' his comforter. That comforter must a' been yards long. I thought he never would stop. Then he set there ten minutes without speakin' a word, till by-and-by he burst out with:

'I say, Hanner, Erk Waters is goin' to hev a little party to-night, and he wanted me to ax you.'

'I'd like ter go,' says I, looking sideways over to mother, for the little boys was giggling—if mother says so. You see, boys and girls in them days didn't go off without asking.

'It's awful cold,' says mother, 'ain't it, Jedediah?'

'Well, not so very, goin' through the woods.'

'Bear seen in them woods,' said father, his blue eyes twinklin, 'and not so long ago neither.'

'Let 'em come,' said Jeddy; we called him 'Jeddy' for short. 'I wasn't born in the backwoods to be scared of a bear.'

'Well,' said father, quite sobertike, 'if you do meet one, don't let it run off with my Hanner.'

'And mind you bring her home 'fore 'leven,' said mother. I don't 'prove of girls of sixteen staying out all night to frolics. Now, Hanner, wrap up proper warm. It's a desp'rit cold wind.'

Well, I put on my new caliker, with a black silk apron, worked in herrin'-bone, with pink silk, slicked my hair, and was down stairs in quick time. I never felt so grand in my life as I did a-hangin' on Jeddy's arm. It makes me laugh to think of it, and how I asked him if his ma was well in such a patronizing way. Of course there was fences to git over, and he let me fall at the very fust one.

Dear me! how frightened the fellow was! Why, he stood there like a spook, and let me pick myself up, and then said, over and over, 'Oh, aint you hurt? Are you hurt bad? Take hold of my arm closer;' and I snuggled up to his jacket again, trying hard not to limp, for I did lame my ankle a little. But when I got to the old farm-house I forgot all about it. All the girls and boys were there for miles about, and the first thing I heard was—

'Oh, Hanner's got a beau!' and I felt kinder provoked, and kinder glad. Well, we played 'The Weevily Wheat,' an'

'Here stands a young couple,
Joined heart and hand,'

an' 'Hunt the Slipper,' and lots o' games that youngsters don't think of these times. We weren't dressed to kill, with sashes a yard wide under our armpits, and we could run and jump and laugh, [illegible] y. I've seen a young feller who had maybe been ordered to redeem a pawn after a game of 'button,' chase a girl all over an' out, and round a house half-a-dozen times, afore he'd git a kiss. You'd s[illegible] now-a-days, sich doin's were undig[illegible]d, an' all that, but I know that girls [illegible]ny day weren't half as forward an' [illegible] now in' as they are now.

Well, 'bout 'leven, we started for home, and we'd got so well acquainted that we talked lots more than when we came.

'Ain't it dark?' said I, as we entered the thick woods. 'Nothin' would tenipt me to go through here alone. Do you s'pose there's been any bears here lately?'

'Course not,' says Jedediah. 'If there were, you needn't be 'fraid 'long o' me,' and he held my arm so close that all my fears vanished. What was there to harm one under the protection of such great strong, manly, fearless fellow? [illegible]w I did look up to him!

'[illegible]ain't afraid of nothin',' he went on. 'No, o' the boys ever could scare me. [illegible] critter what comes, any kind of a [illegible]est w[illegible] I'd protect you Hanner dear. I [illegible] real liv[illegible] there was a bear here! yes, a [illegible] each bear! I'd show you how I could [illegible]d you!'

This was getting romantic, wasn't it, now? I felt so grateful that I tried to think of something to say to express my gratitude, when he gave a start and cry

'What's that?'

'I pulled the wrappings from my face, and there, moving from the trees to the left, was a great black somethin', coming toward us.

'Oh, Jedediah, I'm afraid,' said I, my teeth beginning to chatter, 'there is a bear!' Oh, dear! what shall I do?'

'Jest hurry up!' was his reply, and I felt his arm tremble. 'Well! I've ter be gittin' home myself!' he continued, and I found out of this mighty quick, and I found he meant it, for I couldn't hardly begin to keep up with him. The way he ran was something wonderful for so brave a youth, but the quicker we went, the quicker came that dreadful bear. At last my valiant protector cried out:

'Let go, Hanner, let go!'

'Oh, Jedediah,' I gasped, 'don't run away from me;' and I just hung on tighter, while he ran, draggin' me along. Pretty soon he pushed me' but I wouldn't [illegible]

'Let go my arm, I say! There's no need of us both being devoured; let go, I say!' and with that he gave a savage pull at my arm, and away he went, leaving me all along.

'Well, dear, I couldn't begin to tell you what I suffered. I can almost realize it this minit, for all I could think of was howling wolves and horrid bears and everything that was terrible. I knew that black thing, whatever it was was close upon me, for I could hear it. Of course I had not stopped running when my brave protector left me, but my strength kind'r give out; I felt faint like, and though there wasn't much light, the atmosphere turned blacker. Closer and closer the thing came.

'There was a great clump of trees on one side; if I could make that, and steal behind it, the 'bear' might pass on. I did gain it, and waited, sick with fear. I wondered my hair didn't turn white, as Lord Byron's did, poor young feller.'

'It wasn't Lord Byron's grandma; it was the 'Prisoner of Chillon's;' Lord Byron only wrote about it.'

'O, did he? well, it's all right whichever way. I clung hold of the trees, trembling all over, and the thing did go past. Gals, I did hope it would ketch Jedediah, and eat him all up. I was so angry and mortified and frightened. Well, pretty soon I stole out. The bear had gone deeper into the woods, but I knew where I was, on the open road to the house, which was only half a mile away. I suppose the sound of my feet attracted the critter, for I soon found out that it was after me agen, and then there was a race.

'Screaming at the top of my voice 'Father! help! murder!' I flew on, and on flew the critter behind me. Pretty soon, I saw the light of the house. The front door was open, and father and mother were coming out, and I screamed louder and ran faster, my voice growing more and more hysterical, till at last I fell into father's arms, gasping:

'The bear! the bear!'

'I guess I didn't really sense anything till daylight. They were all frightened half to death, and old fat Doctor Bailey was standin' over me, and mother rubbin' my hands and cryin', and father walkin' the floor, and, O dear! but it was dreadful.

'Where is it—the bear?' I asked, weakly. 'Did it hurt father? did he shoot it?'

'The bear, dear, was only Pet, your black pony,' said my mother, soothingly. I turned my face to the wall. Had I undergone all that anguish for poor innocent Pet? I felt as if I never wanted to see anybody again. I remembered now that Jedediah had left the bars down where the pasture communicated with the woods, because his hands were so cold, the coward! and our pet pony, who would follow any o' the family, had been straying round there, and got over; then she recognized me.

'Father was very angry with Jedediah, and, in fact, when the story got round, folks laughed at him so that he had to leave the place, for, no matter where he went, somebody was sure to ask him:

'Seen any bears lately, Jedediah?'

'And that was my first experience with beaux and bears."

The Good (?) Old Times.

It sounds very poetical to say "the good old times," but if we would be strictly truthful, having an eye upon the actual rather than upon the sentimental past, we should be more inclined to designate them as the "mean old times," especially if, by some powerful freak of nature, we should be taken up and set back among the days that fell to the lot of those who were old men and women when our grandparents were little children. It is no wonder that Benjamin Franklin, with his prophetic vision, wished it had been his destiny to be born two or three centuries later. Think of the journeys then requiring days that may now be accomplished in as many hours, and with far more comfort. Think of sitting in church winter after winter without the cheerful presence of a fire save that which was kindled in the imagination by the glowing eloquence of the preacher as he described the torments of the "damned." Think of paying forty or fifty dollars a year for a newspaper, and think, also, of the beggarly little sheet and all its meagre qualities! Think of living without a friction match in the house, or a tooth-brush, or a carpet, or gaslight, or a sewing-machine, or doing without overshoes and umbrellas, and a thousand other things that we call necessities. It is startling to consider the multitude of things, small and great, that we possess which contribute to our comfort, our welfare, our ease, our enjoyment, that were utterly unknown to our innocent grandfathers, and never could have entered their dreams. The spirit of progress consults our convenience and multiplies advantages in every direction, enhancing the charm of life, diminishing its pains, and inviting us to welcome and enjoy its innumerable gifts.

Pleasant Letters.

They are sheets of sunshine. A Methodist clergyman, of Hartford, Conn., writes to David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., that "Favorite Remedy" cured him of Chronic Liver Disease and Indigestion, from which he had suffered for a long time. This was splendid, but nothing more than any one may expect who uses this medicine. One Dollar a bottle is a small consideration when health was is in question. The clergyman says he is going to introduce Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" among his people. He can't do better.

Novels in Public Libraries.

ARE THEY BENEFICIAL OR INJURIOUS?

A vigorous attack on the reading of fiction and its encouragement by public libraries was made by Mr. J. Taylor Kay, the librarian of Owen's College, Manchester, at the second annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, held in that city. Under an act of Parliament, passed in 1851, free libraries have been established in seventy-five towns and cities in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. They are maintained by taxation in their respective districts at the rate of a penny to the pound sterling, and their aggregate annual income from this source is about $500,000. They are also constantly in receipt of money, land and books. Kay contended that novels, tales and romances should be excluded from such institutions, and moved that the Association adopt a resolution to that effect. This proposition not only gave rise to an animated controversy on the spot, but has since been widely discussed throughout Great Britain.

It was wrong, said Mr. Kay, to tax the people of any community in order to provide them with mere means of amusement. But novels, he argued, are even worse than this, they are actually injurious. "They illustrate none of the nobler principles of our human nature," he continued: "they contain no true chivalry, and are nuisances to mankind at large. Who ever heard of devourers of Aimard, Mayne Reid, Cooper and Marryat being led to more substantial literature?"

As to the objection that fiction is a luxury which should not be furnished at the public expense, the answer in the case of free libraries in Great Britian is obvious. These institutions are established at the instance of the taxpayers who support them, and surely they ought to be allowed to choose their own reading. The fact that fiction constitutes seventy-five per cent. of the matter read indicates that novels, tales and romances are just what supporters of the libraries most want, and they have the highest claim to consideration, since they pay the expense.

But the additional assertions as to the character of novels may, perhaps, deserve attention from the moralist. They called out a strong and just protest by Capt. Mayne Reid, who truly says that if his own writings have any merit, it is just that which Mr. Kay would deny them—of leading their readers to more substantial literature. We can think of no series of books for boys which are more truthful in spirit and manly in tone than those of Capt. Mayne Reid; and while they may excite a spirit of adventure, they do not hold out false hopes of ease and comfort in the attainment of success. "The readers of Mayne Reid's books," wrote Dr. Livingstone in his last letter from the wilds of Central Africa, "are the stuff to make travelers of." And yet Mr. Kay, among the freshly filled shelves of the Owens College Library, has come to the conclusion that works of this sort illustrate none of the nobler principles of human nature and nothing of true chivalry.

Every American reader will appreciate the injustice of the fling at Cooper's novels, and Mr. Kay is almost equally wide of the mark in including Marryat in his condemnation. The late Canon Kingsly was probably as fierce an opponent of all that is false and unmanly in literature and morals as any man that lived in England in modern times; and how different was his estimate of Marryat's influence appears in the following passage from one of his letters concerning his own career as a novelist: "I know," he says, "that God has made me a parish priest, and that is the duty which lies nearest me, and that I may seem to be leaving my calling in novel writing. But has He not taught me all these things by my very parish priest life? Did He, too, let me become a strong, daring, sporting wild man-of-the-woods for nothing? Surely, the education which He has given me, so different from that which authors generally receive, points out to me a peculiar calling to preach on these points from my own experience, as it did to good old Isaac Walton, as it has done in our day to that truly noble man, Capt. Marryat."

In the discussion which followed Mr. Kay's motion, his views met with but very little sympathy. The statement that Mrs. Wood's "East Lynne" had for years past been the most popular book in Manchester was for some reason received with roars of laughter; and Mr. George Bullen, one of the librarians of the British Museum, said that he, read all the novels that came out, which excites wonder as to what time he has left for the performance of his duties. In the end, the assembled librarians refused to take any action on the subject whatever. The favorable influence of fiction upon the imaginative faculties, especially in this age of practical science and utilitarian philosophy, was not very much dwelt upon, though the recreative effects of novel reading were pointed out. The fact is that although novels may be luxuries, they are luxuries in the same sense that tea and coffee are. People have made up their minds not to go without them.—New York Sun.

OUR RECIPE FOR CURING MEAT.—To one gallon of water take one and a half pounds of salt, one-half pound of sugar, one-half ounce of saltpeter, one-half ounce of potash. In this ratio the pickle can be increased to any quantity desired. Let these be boiled together until all the dirt from the sugar rises to the top and is skimmed off. Then throw it in a tub to cool, and when cold pour it over your beef or pork. The meat must be well covered with pickle, and should not be put down for at least two days after killing, during which time it should be slightly sprinkled with powdered saltpeter, which removes all the surface blood, etc., leaving the meat fresh and clean. Some omit boiling the pickle, and find it to answer well, though the operation of boiling purifies the pickle by throwing off the dirt always to be found in sugar and salt. If this recipe is strictly followed, it will require only a single trial to prove its superiority over the common way or most ways of putting down meat, and will not soon be abandoned for any other. The meat is unsurpassed for sweetness, delicacy and freshness of color.—Germantown Telegraph.

Carelessness with Fire-Arms.

I am reminded every once in a while upon reading some tragedy caused by reckless "fooling" with guns and pistols, how near I once came to taking the life of a fellow-being, and it has been a constant warning to me never to point a gun at anybody, unless in self-defense. At the time referred to, which was about 1858, I was learning the printer's art at 161 Lake street, and during a "slack" time in the Fall the boys in the office concluded to have a trip to the Calumet after ducks. Most of them, not owning guns, had to borrow or hire them. Ol. Fordham, our pressman (and still a well-known pressman of the city, now a veritable fossil, in his propensities,) hired a gun of Eaton, I think. We secured a team—five or six in the party—drove down before day-break, had but indifferent luck, but of course had a good time, with the usual accompaniment of small mishaps, such as capsizes, breakage of harness, etc., and returned by moonlight in the evening of the same day. Those of the boys who had borrowed or rented guns left them at the office until the next day. It should have been stated before, however, that previous to getting into the wagon to return home, we all discharged our guns (or supposed we did.)

Next day at noon, while I was washing up, Fordham's gun, which was standing near the washing-trough, caught my eye, and I took it up to examine it. Fordham was working the old Ruggles press at the other end of the office, distant, perhaps, fifty feet. I cocked the gun, both barrels, several times, as everybody does who gets hold of a gun to examine it, and seeing that there were exploded caps on both nipples, had no doubt but that the gun was empty. Then asking Fordham if the gun was loaded, and receiving a negative reply, boy-like, I said:

"Give me leave, Ol?"

"Yes," said he, without taking his eyes from his work, "fire away!"

I had some caps in my pocket, and thinking to startle him, I placed one on the right hand nipple, took good aim at his head, and was about to pull the trigger, when a sudden impulse caused me to turn and aim at a hand-bill hanging about ten feet from him.

A loud report, a tattered hand-bill, a scared pressman; and a worse scared individual holding a gun in his nerveless hands, was the result.

Is it any wonder that I then and there resolved never to fool with fire-arms under any circumstances?—H. E. ROUNDS in Chicago Field.

A SIN AGAINST NATURE.—Of all the blunders that the common farmer and some others make with trees, none is so common or so hurtful, as the practice of cutting off the lower limbs. All over the country nothing is more common than to see mutilated trees on almost every farm—big limbs cut off near the body of the tree, and of course rotting to the heart. This is a great sin against nature. The very limbs necessary to protect the tree against wind and sun, and just where they are most needed, are ruthlessly cut away. But the greatest injury is the rotting that always takes place when a big limb is sawed off; too big to heal over, it must rot, and, being kept moist by the growing tree, is in the right condition to rot, and being on the body the rotting goes to the heart and hurts the whole tree. It is common all over the country to see large orchards mutilated in this way. We often see holes in trees where big limbs have been cut away that, squirrels and even raccoons can crawl in. Perhaps the only reason these trimmers would give is, that lower limbs were easier got at, and some would say they wanted to raise a crop under the trees.

The Dangers of the Stock Market.

A man may be incredulous enough to risk his money in the fickle mysteries of a mercurial stock market, but when he gets the Itching Piles, he goes straight for Dr. Swayne's Ointment. Unlike the Bulls and Bears of the Stock Exchange, who clean you out of hard earned cash, it returns your money with interest, in the way of allaying the intense itching, and insuring sweet repose.

Two Recipes for Scalloped Oysters.

First Recipe—Toast several pieces of bread brown and butter them on both sides; take a baking dish and put the toast round the sides, instead of a crust; pour your oysters into a dish, and season with salt, pepper, mace and butter, Crumb bread on the top and bake in a quick oven for fifteen minutes.

Second Recipe—Grease well a baking dish with butter, throw fine crumbs about it until they adhere an all sides; have a bowl of seasoned crumbs ready, and lay oysters into the dish so as cover the bottom of it; then sprinkle crumbs over them and a small piece of butter then another layer of oysters covered in he same way with crumbs until the dish is full; cover the last layer rather more thickly with crumbs, and lay several pieces of butter here and there over it; bake it until it is nicely brown, fifteen or twenty minutes—not longer, or the oysters will get hard. In putting in the oysters, lift them with a spoon from the liquor, and do not drain them.

Skill in the Workshop.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. If long hours in confinement in close rooms have enfeebled his hand or dimmed his sight, let him at once, and before some organic trouble appears, take Hop Bitters. His system will be rejuvenated, his nerves strengthened, his sight become clear, and the whole constitution be built up to a higher working condition.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO'S

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

"An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it to this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.
IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.
IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST. When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address, GEO. P. THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

Wanted to See the Editor.

A man on the cars was offered a newspaper. He took it, looked at the heading, and then threw it aside with disgust and remarked:

"I don't want news from that paper."

"I supposed everbody read it in these parts," I answered. "Has it been pitching into you?"

"Pitching into me? Great Cæsar! I should think it had. But you just let me meet the editor of that paper."

"You never made anything by striking editor," I said; "better grin and bear it."

"Yes, that's all right for you to say; I just let me meet that man! I'll show him how to run a newspaper."

"What did he do?"

"Do? He did a deal. Here's how it is: I often go to Springfield in the evening and come home on the first train in the morning. Well, one night I met an old crony, and we went to the music hall and the theatre. When we came out we met some friends. Of course could not get right out, so I treated; fact, we were having a pretty good time when some fellows came in and began to raise a row. In less than no time police were in and had us. The next morning I was hauled before the court and fined $7.40. I did not care much, because I gave a false name, and I knew my wife couldn't find it out; but the very next morning I'll be eternally confused if that very paper didn't have it all in, and my name too."

"Did your wife see it?"

"I should say she did."

"Did she make a fuss?"

"Fuss! Godfrey Elihu! Are you married?"

Chest Development and Consumption.

It is stated that during the last twenty-five years not a single singer has died of consumption at St. Petersburg, although this disease has outstripped all others and now holds the first place among the causes of death in the Russian capital. From this and other facts Dr. Vasilieff draws an inference in favor of the exercise involved in singing, as a preventative measure against consumption. There would seem to be room for question as to the relation of cause and effect. It may either happen that singers are not consumptive because they can use their chest and throat freely, or that consumptive persons are not singers because the weakness which procedes disease incapacitates the chest and throat for exertion. Both of these hypotheses are true up to a certain point, but neither holds good in all cases. A very little observation will suffice to show that a good singing voice may coexist with a weak or diseased chest, whereas the perfectly healthy may be unable to sing.

It was some forty years ago a common practice to give consumptive patients a specially arranged tube to breathe through with a view to exercising the chest. We venture to hope the experiment will not be repeated. Chest development can only be accomplished in a manner consistent with health during the growing state of childhood, and then the most natural and convenient methods of exercise are the best. Later on in life great mischief may be done by unduly straining the muscles of the thorax and those of the throat, besides the peril of injuring the smaller tubes and air vessels of the lungs by violent exertion, for which the organs of the voice have not been early trained.

However things may seem, no evil thing is success, and no good thing is failure.

"What's the man yelling at?" asked a farmer of his boy. "Oh!" chuckled the boy, "he's yelling at the top of his voice."

The barber who would not color the mustache of an inebriate because he feared he would die a drunkard, had a fair streak of humor in him.

"Now, Willie," said the anxious mother, "how did you get that big daub of molasses on your best jacket?" "Oh, sirup-titiously, ma," and his peculiar wink saved him a boxed ear.

A Chinaman with blonde hair is the latest San Francisco novelty. Turn him out in the lecture field, is he not by education, birth, and nature a yellow-cuetionist?

A Dublin professional man addressed an artisan, who was waiting in his hall, rather brusquely: "Halloa, you fellow, do you want me?" The answer was prompt: "No, yer honner, I am waiting for a gentleman."

It is heartrending to make such corrections, but is very necessary sometimes. "In speaking of the president of our local bank last week," says a country journal, "for 'He skedaddled,' please read 'He scheduled.'"

A bashful young man could defer the momentous question no longer, so he stammered: "Martha, I—I—do you—must have—are you aware that the good book says—er, says that it is not g-good that m-man should be alone?" "Then hadn't you better run home to your mother?" Martha cooly suggested.

A little boy, some six years old, was using his slate and pencil on a Sunday, when his father, who was a minister, entered and said: "My son, I prefer that you should not use your slate on the Lord's day." "I am drawing meeting houses, father," was the prompt reply.

Scene, a South End horse car. Enters an elaborately dressed lady, diamond soltaires, eight-buttoned kids, etc. At first no one moves. Soon a gentleman offers a seat. "Thank you; you are the only gentleman in the car. The rest is hogs." Fact.

The gas suddenly went out at a concert the other evening, and when it was relit a young lady indignantly accused a happy-looking man who sat on the next bench of kissing her in the darkness. The man tried to explain, but some of the lady's friends seized and proceeded to fire him out with expedition. As they reached the door, the victim managed to gasp out, "Me kiss a'woman! Why, I'm just divorced." That settled it. He was apologized to, and the man of experience proudly resumed his seat.

"You see," said the despondent man, who was sitting on a barrel, addressing the grocer, who was spearing the top of a biscuit case with a knife, "some people have good luck and some people have bad luck. Now I remember once I was walking along the street with Tom Jellicks, and he went down one side of it and I went down the other. We hadn't gone more'n half way down when he found a pocket-book with £50 in it, and I stepped on a woman's dress and so got acquainted with my present wife. It was always so," added he, with a sigh, "that Tom Jellicks was the luckiest man in the world, and I never had no luck."

A Race on Stilts.

HOW MEN AND WOMEN AMUSE THEMSELVES AT ARCACHON.

I remember particularly a certain stilt race, one of the oddest races that I ever saw. Six men and four women were "entered," as the horsey men would say. At Arcachon the women share the exercises of the men. There were then on the beach of Eyrac ten tchankas. In the patois of the Landes, which one might be tempted to confound with the Japanese or Chinese, idioms, a tchanka is a person mounted on stilts, and sas tchankas means to mount on stilts. These ten tchankas had all the same traditional costume, without distinction of sex, that is to say, a beret on the head, a mantle of wool over the shoulders, a buttoned doublet, bare feet, and the legs enveloped in a camano or fleece, fixed by red garters. Their stilts raised them five or six feet from the ground. A pole served them as a third point of support. Seen from a distance they looked like gigantic grasshoppers. The tchanka, however, is seen to perfection on the bare lands motionless and fixed like a solitary triangle, at sunset, or else when he leans against a pine tree, silently knitting a stocking and guarding a black and lean flock. Stern and mute in the midst of the crowd, which was examining them with curiosity, their thoughts were concentrated solely on the race that they were about to dispute. The prize was not much. The victor won twenty francs. But twenty francs in the eyes of the tchanka represents a fortune. Soon, at a signal given by the president of the fete, they all ten spread over the beach howling and yelling. If it had not been for their immense strides, which pass imagination, you might have thought that you were present at an Arabian fantasia. Their evolutions were the same, accomplished with the same rapidity, in conditions which touched upon the impossible, and on ground where the stilts sunk in a foot at each step. Their mantles streaming in the wind like those of Arabian cavaliers, they ran and pivoted around as deftly as if they had been on foot. The women were by no means inferior to the men; one of them in fact came in second, and they were only to be distinguished by their shriller cries.

This race was followed by some private exercises performed by the tchankas in order to provoke the generosity of the spectators. They jumped, they sat down and rose up again, they picked up as they ran pieces of money that were thrown to them. The spectacle was not the least extraordinary. Bouncing forward at full speed, the man was suddenly seen to stop, the stilts bent, fell as if were, to pieces, then something was seen moving between three pieces of wood, like the body of a spider in the middle of its long legs. The whole performance was done with lightning rapidity, the stilts rose again, and the man reappeared on the top of them and resumed his course.

Female Dress Reform.

A correspondent writes from Leipsic that a society composed of fashionable women has been formed there with a view to discouraging extravagance of dress, and any and all superfluous expenditure for adornment or display. The members are pledged not to wear jewels, false hair, trains, double skirts, or anything not required by consideration of decency and self-respect. Patterns of single gowns with very little trimming have been devised, and certain mantua-makers have agreed to follow those patterns rigorously, whenever they are asked to. The members are persuaded that they will be able to work a thorough reform, and do great good by causing rules of economy to be widely adopted in that city. As many of them are rich and of high social position, they think that their influence will be felt and their example followed throughout Bavaria. We hope that they may be justified in their opinion; but we have shuddering doubts. Something of the sort has taken place in an Ohio town, though there the motive is theologic. A number of young women have organized themselves into a Circle of the Sanctified, as they designate it, and have discarded gems and garniture of every kind. Recently one of them was found in the street in the early morning in her night-gown, and not long after in a still worse state of wardrobe. She was arrested, properly draped, and pronounced insane. Probably she is so. When young women or even tolerably old women have discarded ornament or surrendered the pomp of clothes, there is good reason to question their mental soundness. Sane women are not in that line.—N. Y. Times.

The Highest Rank.

Made from harmless materials, and adapted to the needs of fading and falling hair, Parker's Hair Balsam has taken the highest rank as an elegant and reliable hair restorative.

HOW TO CURE SNORING.—One of the simplest and at the same time most effectual remedies against snoring is to place a thin, oval-shaped piece of silver or hard rubber, between three and four inches in length and one and a half inches in width, formed so as to fit the jaws comfortably, between the lips and gums. By this simple appliance the breath is forced through the nostrils, and, aside from being a preventative against snoring, it keeps the throat and tongue moist instead of being parched and dry as when the air is inhaled into the mouth and throat. If the mouth is kept shut, all trouble about snoring will be removed.

SALT IN AGRICULTURE.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman finds efficacy in a liberal use of salt, and at the close of the article thus epitomizes his results:

My experience in the use of salt leads me to the following conclusions:

It keps the land cool and moist.
It neutralizes drought.
It exterminates all soil vermin.
It prevents potato rot.
It glazes and stiffens straw, preventing crinkling and rust.
It keeps the ground in such condition that the berry of all kinds of grain fills plumply, however long continued the hot and dry weather may be.

Emotive religion without righteousness is all gush. Morality without righteousness is only dress parade; but when our emotions and our morality are the result of character, that, and that alone, is righteousness.

Grateful to Invalids.

Floreston Cologne is greatful to invalids, because it is refreshing without the sickening effect of most perfumes.

The love of literature enables many a man to say with Hamerton: "The only question I would ask concerning Crœsus is "Is he reading a book better than I?" A love for the beautiful in art and nature makes the whole world of beauty one's own, no matter who happens to hold the deeds.

Skinny Men

Wells' Health Renewer. Absolute cure for nervous debility and weakness of the generative functions. $1, at druggists. Mich. Depot, J. E. Davies & Co., Detroit, Mich.

He said he would like to be an editor; that he wanted to revel among fancies, startle the world with his ideas, with words that burned and thoughts that shook the nation. He was engaged by the Oil City Derrick, but after he had read three column proof of an auditor's report and was handed a page of sheriff's sales, he remarked that facts were less in his line than poetry, and walked out the door.

Quick and Sure.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves, when by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength quickly and surely coming back to them.

CARE OF BOOTS AND SHOES.—If properly cared for, boots and shoes will last nearly twice as long as usual. Put the new shoes in a plate or dish and pour into it enough boiled linseed oil to cover the soles, not permiting it to touch the uppers. The oil causes the leather to resist moisture, preserves the thread, if sewed, and causes pegs to swell, if pegged. Give the uppers a good coating of neatsfoot oil and tallow. Never allow them to stand too near the fire or in a damp place.

A Foolish Mistake.

Don't make a mistake of confounding a remedy of merit with quack medicines. We speak from experience when we say that Parker's Ginger Tonic is a sterling health restorative which will do all that it claimed for it. We have used it ourselves with the happiest results for Rheumatism and when worn out by overwork. See adv.—Times.

Here is a speciman of the late Zach Chandler's oratory:

"Take the largest ship that floats upon our waters, put on her mastheads the flags of every Southern State that rebelled, and over all surmount the stars and bars, and she may sail around the world and she will not get the salute of even a popgun. Take the smallest ship that floats upon our waters, put on her stern the words 'United States cutter,' and there is not a man of war nor a fort of any nation on God's footstool which will not give her a national salute."

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

The Boomerang.

The Philadelphia Saturday Night, in reply to a correspondent, thus describes the "boomerang," an instrument to which political writers and speakers make frequent reference nowadays:

The boomerang is a weapon of the Australian aborigines, and in the throwing of it they are very dextrous. It consists of a piece of hard wood, with the curve of a parabola, and is about 2 feet long, 2½ inches broad, ½ inch thick, and rounded at the extremities. One side is flat, the other is rounded, and is brought to a bluntish edge. It is discharged with the hand by one end, the convex edge being forward and the flat side upward. After advancing some distance, and ascending slowly in the air with a quick rotaory motion, it begins to retrograde, and finally falls to the ground behind the thrower. A weapon of similar construction, but wanting the return flight, has been found in use among the savage tribes of both India and Africa. The surprising return motion is produced by the bulging side of the missile. The air is impinging thereon, lifts the missile in the air, precisely as by hitting the oblique bars in a wind-mill forces it to go around. The Australians are very expert in hitting birds with it, the animals being, of course, behind them, and are not aware that they are being shot at.

The Results of Necessity.

What the ancients suffered for the want of knowledge in medical science, can only be appreciated by contrasting the vast amount of suffering cured and pain alleviated in modern times, by the use of Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases. Its introduction was characterized by the necessary withdrawel of a score or more of illusive, quack nostrums, whose evil effects have left living monuments to denounce them. Thus is exemplified the proverb, Necessity is the mother of Invention.

ARTHURS'

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

The Detroit Evening News has reason to be proud of the outcome of the Peoples' libel suit. It returns thanks for the moral support extended to it by the press and people of Michigan in these manly words:

The News desires to express its appreciation and thanks for the support it has received from the press of Michigan in its great fight for the freedom of the press. It is no small thing to remember that in this contest we have had the hearty God-speed of the papers which constitute the very bone and sinew of Michigan journalism—a support that came spontaneously, and with the most earnest and manly ring to it that written language could impart. Did space permit their kind words would be here reproduced, but they would fill columns. And there was another and wider constituency—the people of Michigan. Hundreds of letters have been received by the News, bidding it to go on and conquer, commending its work, and in many cases furnishing valuable clues and information, which were of great benefit to the attorneys for the News. One and all, fellow journalists and others, the News thanks you.

MICHIGAN'S ADVANTAGES.

The great advantages possessed by the people of Michigan in the variety and the cheapness of the means of transportation between their farms, manufactories, and mines, and the great body of consumers outside the state, are these:

1. Almost the entire state has short rail communication with the lake ports, and thus can secure water transportation at cheap rates to the west, the east, and especially to the seaboard for its grain, lumber, iron, salt, fruit and other products.

2. It is traversed by railroads intimately connected with all the great and west trunk lines, and the lowest rail rates to the west, the east, the southeast and the Atlantic coast can thus be obtained at all times by its shippers.

3. Its railroad lines are interwoven with each other to an unusual degree and every important junction or point of contact enjoys the advantage of competition, and gets the benefit of low through rates. For some years the average charge for carrying freight of all the roads doing business in Michigan has been so low as to make them very vigorous competitors during the season of navigation with the lake lines.

4. The points in Michigan at which rival railroads come in contact are so numerous, and their lines cross each other so frequently, that no combinations of the great trunk companies, and no pooling of interests on their part, can prevent local competion from making itself felt. The experience of the past fully sustains this statement and the shipping points of Michigan have not been without the benefits of competition even at times when the railroads were in theory acting in entire harmony.

5. Michigan is several hundred miles nearer the seaboard than either Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota or Dakota, and practically than Wisconsin, the other grain producing territories of the northwest, which also have cheap land for sale in large quantities. Wheat of the same quality will sell in New York for the same price, whether raised in Michigan or farther west, but it can be carried to New York from Michigan at a cheaper rate than from any point beyond the lakes; therefore the farmer in this state can get for his crop a price as much higher than that which his western competitor can command as the rate of freight are in his favor.—As a matter of fact it has during the last few years cost the farmers of the northwest from seven to seventeen cents more per bushel to market their exported wheat than it has cost those of Michigan, and this difference the producers of this state have realized in the shape of better prices. What is true of wheat, the most valuable staple of this region, is also true of the other surplus products which seek an eastern, southeastern or foreign market.

6. From nearly all the principal cities of Michigan shipments can be made on the most advantageous terms to the eastern consumer or to Atlantic ports. Many interior towns now compete with Detroit in this respect, and the tendency of railroad management is toward the multiplication of these smaller points of direct through shipment.—"Michigan and its Resources," issued by the State Commissioner of Immigration.

HOW TO SECURE WESTERN FARM HOMES.

Under the above caption, David W. Judd, who has just returned from a five thousand mile inspection tour through the West, North-west and South-west—gives in the February American Agriculturalist 15 columns of illustrated advice to those seeking homes in the far west. The article starts off as follows:

Do not go west with a family, unless you have enough money to make a fair start.

Do not borrow money to go west. The majority of those we have met in their western homes, who have failed, have been those who came on borrowed money, or without enough funds to ensure a send off.

After reading this article, select such region as you think you will like best. People generally prefer to keep in the same latitude they have lived in.

Go in the spring and get acclimated.

Take as little baggage and as few heirlooms as possible. They cost money for freight and in addition are apt to be an encumbrance in a new home.

Provide yourself with a small collection of good books for the family, and before going renew your subscription to the American Agriculturalist. It will be just as serviceable in the new home as in the old.

If you are able to do so, you had better first go out and explore before taking your family out with you.

Do not attempt to explore too much. We have met people beyond the Missouri river who had visited nearly all the Land Grants, and the more they travelled, the more unsettled they were as to where they should locate.

Decide upon your climate and locality, and then select your land. If you wait too long, you are apt to become very much unsettled.

Do not go west if you have a sick family. Change of climate may benefit them, but it is not worth while to take the chances.

Do not go west expecting not to be homesick, for your mountain scenery your forests and your streams which present such a contrast to the monotony of endless prairies. It may be very lonely at first, but you will soon plant your own trees, and have pleasant surroundings, and near neighbors.

Do not go expecting to become rich immediately. Several years of good crops may be required to place you in easy circumstances.

If you are a clerk on a small salary in the city, and have a few hundred dollars ahead, give up your clerkship and strike for the western lands. There is no great amount of experience required in cultivating these prairies.

Church Loafers.

We clip the following from the Gaylord, Kansas, Herald. It shows how stories will grow as they travel away from home:

"The time honored custom of young men hanging around the doors of churches, waiting for the services to be over and their girls to come out, Peck's Sun remarks has received a check at Tecumseh, Mich. On a recent occasion three young men of that city, while lingering in the vestibule of a church, under the very droppings of the sanctuary, became involved in a fight. Fists were used, and language, and for a season the holy place was a holy terror. The noise attracted the fathers in Israel inside the church, and they came out and wrestled with the stripplings. The stripplings, however, turned when they were trodden on by the heavy cowhides of the deacons, and one or two of the old pillars of Zion had their noses peeled ere the evil spirit in the youths was laid. The city authorities have, since the occurrence, amended the ordinance against loafing, so that in addition to street corners, etc., the vestibules of churches are included in the places where idlers are prohibited from congregating."

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants, Parsons' Exterminator. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

Thundering Down The Ages.

Cincinnati Star: The hideous assassin is anxious that his blasphemous utterances may "go thundering down the ages." Nothing in regard to him will "thunder down the ages" except that he murdered a President and was hanged for it.

Candidate of Dazzling Fameness.

New Orleans Picayune: If Guiteau had stolen a ham or robbed a hen roost the judge would tell him to shut up when he attempts to interrupt the court with his disgusting gab. As he murdered a good President, considerable liberty must be given him.

A Brotherly Suggestion.

Cincinnati Enquirer: That was a very brotherly suggestion of John W. Guiteau when he said a fortune could be made by exhibiting the skeleton, or even the skull of Guiteau, the assassin. John should buy a tent and wait a few days for the cadaver.

Such a Thing as Justice.

New York Sun: We never saw anything like the withering contempt which is now poured on Rutherford B. Hayes by journals of every party, Republican as well as Democratic, in all parts of the country. Verily there is such a thing as justice, even in this world!

A Disastrous Effect.

Cincinnati Times: The interminable war between Tammany Hall and Irving Hall is having a disastrous effect in New York in more than one way. The State Commissioner of Lunacy reports an excess of 350 insane persons over the returns of last year.

Fun of the Side Splitting Sort.

Territorial Enterprise: The favorite amusement of the Arizona cow boys is shooting off each other's hats for the whisky. If, unfortunately, a 'boy' misses the hat and kills the man, he has to stand the drinks for the whole crowd. The bar keeper, in the latter contingency, cheerfully pays the funeral expenses.

Garfield's Record.

Philadelphia Times: It's hardly worth while for the men who defamed President Garfield when alive, to assume to say for him what he refused to say for himself, in favor of the Mahone Repudiation dishonor of Virginia. His record is free from the stain of either personally or officially approving the coalition of spoilsmen that aimed to climb into power over the prostrate form of a great Commonwealth.

No Submission to John Kelly.

Philadelphia Chronicle: It is to be hoped by every friend of the party who appreciates the importance of every step which is taken by the New York Democracy and who can understand the influence which it has on the organization outside of that State, that no conclusion will be arrived at which will involve recognition of or submission to John Kelly. It is true that with the mere handful of legislators at Albany which he controls he is able to deprive the Democracy of the fruits of their victory, but it will be far better to allow him to do this than allow him to play, as he is now again attempting to play, the role of an arrogant dictator.

Inharmonious New York Democrats.

Philadelphia Times: The Democracy of New York, notoriously imbecile for practical use, is nevertheless able to serve one purpose. It can be and almost always is amusing. This unreasonable impulse to humor takes on various forms. Sometimes it bubbles forth in the playful platitudes of Sunset Cox, on the floors of Congress.—Again, it is concealed behind a mask of gravity worn by the Sage of Gramercy while, with one eye significantly closed, he assures the public that he has buried ambition in a grave of anxiety for the triumph of some rival leader of the party. At another time the spectacle of John Kelly masquerading as a reformer convulses the country. Thus at all times the fun-provoking Democracy of the Empire State is challenging attention.

The Boss and the People.

New York Herald: In the days when Boss Kelly was ruling and ruining the democratic party in this city, he was accustomed to talk with imperial arrogance about "giving government" to the people. The phrase was very odious, and by using it the Boss disclosed an undemocratic theory of politics which had much to do with his downfall. The American people "give government" to themselves. In his present disgusting pursuit of blackmailing the Legislature with his little gang of nine strikers the Boss keeps up the same pretense that by divine dispensation he is commissioned to "give government" to his fellow citizens. His organ announced yesterday that "the Tammany Committee on Organization has appointed a committee to represent the people in Albany, comprising General Spinola, Police Commissioner Nichols and Edward Kearney." Truly a remarkable trio of "representatives of the people;" but there is testimony in our Albany correspondence to-day, that they come considerably nearer the mark than the Boss would if he should travel to Albany in person.

PETERSON'S Magazine for February is already before us, more brilliant than ever. Nothing could excel the principal steel plate, "Fast Caught," or the sparkling story it illustrates. The colored pattern, in Kensington stitch, "Design for Pansies," is one of those costly things found only in "Peterson." The literary matter is even better than usual. Both the novelets, that by Mrs. Stephens, and that by Mrs. Austin, increase in power as they go on. The other stories are all superior, those by Frank Lee Benedict and Mrs. Dennett especially so. The illustrations for fashions, for work table patterns, etc., number nearly fifty and are alone worth the price of the number. It is a standing wonder to us how so fine a magazine can be published at so low a price; the puzzle is only to be explained by the immense circulation "Peterson" has attained; the ladies have learned that they cannot afford to be without it. If you have not subscribed for it already, lose no time, but subscribe at once. Or better still get up a club, and earn a copy free. The price is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. Specimens are sent, gratis, if written for, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Consumption Cured.

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 12, 1881.

Upon the recommendation of a friend, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters as a tonic and restorative for my daughter, whom I was thoroughly convinced was fast wasting away in Consumption. Having lost three daughters by the terrible disease, under the care of eminent physicians, I was loth to believe that anything could arrest the progress of the disease; but to my surprise, before my daughter had taken one bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters, she began to mend, and is now quite restored to her former health. A fifth daughter began to show signs of consumption, and when the physician was consulted, he quickly said, "Tonics were required!" And when informed that the elder sister was taking Brown's Iron Bitters, responded, "That is good tonic, take it."

THE ever eloquent John B. Gough delivers his new lecture, "Platform and personal experiences," at the Adrian Opera House next Monday evening, Jan. 23. Tecumseh people should not miss this opportunity of hearing this popular lecturer. This will undoubtedly be the last time our people will have an opportunity to hear him. Arrangements have been made for the trains to be held until close of lecture; also reduced rates.

Will our numerous friends whom we so cordially welcomed at our home Monday evening, please accept our most sincere thanks for the rich and kind remembrances they left. We not only prize them for their real worth, but we are led to think we have a warm place in the hearts of those we have long known and learned to love, and, if we should not all be permitted to meet on a similar occasion again, may it be ours to clasp glad hands in the Golden City, where friendship begun on earth will be unbroken through the ages of eternity.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Geo. E. Stevens combination will appear at the opera house to-morrow evening. It is unnecessary to commend this company, for it has visited Tecumseh before. Below are some of the press notices received.

Stevens' Uncle Tom's Cabin company, which played at the opera house on Friday evening to a large and enthusiastic audience, is the best company that has ever produced this time-honored drama in Port Jervis. The actors were good in their various roles and a new interest was given to the presentation by the introduction of four huge Cuban blood-hounds, which displayed a terrible ferocity. The Stevens company gives a revised and improved presentation of Uncle Tom: The entire performance is good, and contains some very agreeable features not advertised in the bills. The company deserves good patronage and will receive it every time they visit Port Jervis.—Union, Port Jervis, N. Y.

Special Notice.

We wish to extend our thanks to the readers of the HERALD for their generous patronage in the past and solicit a continuance of the same in the future. Our new rule requiring advance payment of subscriptions is not adopted to injure or offend our subscribers but because we are fully convinced that this plan will result in their as well as our own substantial benefit. Any man can enjoy his newspaper better if he knows it is paid for. Any editor can perform his work better if the multitude of little subscription bills which are due him are promptly paid. We have a few premium receipt books still on hand. These will be given out to subscribers who wish them until the supply shall be exhausted.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

GOOD winter weather.

UNCLE TOM'S Cabin is coming.

CROWDS of people in town every day.

A. B. COTTON wants money for dry goods, to-day. Now.

OUR ice dealers are busily engaged in laying in a large amount of ice.

HARRY ROOT is now filling the position of office clerk for C. D. Bills.

MISS ELLA VON BLUMEN is doing Adrian this week in the role of a bicyclist.

M. J. MARTIN is authorized to take subscriptions for the HERALD in the township of Macon.

MR. & MRS. LUKE WOOD have recovered from the effects of their tussel with coal gas last week.

IT seems like old times to greet Dr. Hamilton's pleasant face once more. We hope he may stay with us a while now.

WE understand that an effort will be made to get Geo. W. Bain here for another lecture, before the winter closes.

THE Geo. E. Stevens' troupe is the one that was here last winter and gave such excellent satisfaction. It is undoubtedly the best troupe now on the road playing Uncle Tom.

ABNER WILSON is building a new bridge across Evans creek on his farm. There are certain seasons of the year when the fording of that saucy little stream is not very pleasant.

FRED BOSS was arrested last week, charged with having broken into James Lowry's store on the night of Dec. 27th. He was bound over to the circuit court for trial by Justice Burridge.

NEWBERRY SATTERTHWAITE has presented us with a package of No. 1 hard wheat, which was raised in the Red River Valley and sent out by the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba railway.

THOSE who have never seen Uncle Tom's Cabin will be sure and go to-morrow evening, and as many who have seen it will go again to compare the rendition of the play with what they have seen before.

A gentleman sat a long time, very attentively musing upon a cane bottom chair. At length he said, "I wonder what fellow took the trouble to find all them 'ere holes and put straw around 'em."

NUMBERED stakes are to be driven along the Lake Shore track, 100 feet apart, and are intended for "location stakes," for the purpose of locating any broken rail, unsafe culvert or other necessary repairs along the line.

JAS. LINDSLEY, of Macon, called last Tuesday to pay his subscription and seemed remarkably good natured. Upon enquiring the cause we learned that he had just sold two dressed porkers that weighed 1,000 pounds.

JOHN R. CLARK will repeat his lecture "To and Fro in London," at Dowagiac on the 21st inst., by special request. During March he will give the same lecture at Detroit, Bay City, 3d time; Oil City, Pa.; Albany, N.Y., and other places.

THE following notice clipped from the Rocky Mountain News shows what our friend, Wm. L. Manley, is doing. His Tecumseh acquaintances tender their good wishes:

Mr. W. L. Manley, of Denver, was married to Miss Mary Morris of the same city, at Silver Cliff, on Wednesday, December 21st at 6:30 A. M., by Rev. Mr. Gaynor. Miss Morris is the pretty and accomplished niece of Mayor Morris, of Denver. She was attired in navy blue satin combined with plush; plush jacket; hat to correspond. Diamonds. After the ceremony an elegant breakfast was served at the residence of Mr. H. S. Curries, whose guest Miss Morris has been for the past two months. The table was prettily decorated with flowers and fruit, and the breakfast itself was a fine affair. Mr. and Mrs. Manley have taken up their residence in Denver.

REV. J. W. PAYNE, of Clinton, will preach in the Baptist church, Sunday morning, in exchange with the pastor, who goes to Clinton in the interest of foreign missions. The pastor will preach as usual in the evening.

ON Saturday evening, Jan. 28, Rev. D. C. Durgin, president of Hillsdale college, will deliver his lecture, on Iceland, at Pennington's corners, under the auspices of the Macon Reform club.

FEW houses, in any line of business have extended their trade all over the entire country as have D. M. Ferry & Co., the celebrated Seedmen, of Detroit, Mich. They furnish employment to about 1000 persons, and keep 60 commercial travelers on the road, looking after their interests. They grow on their own seed farms a very large proportion of the seeds they sell, which is probably one of the principal reasons why their goods are held in such high esteem all over the land. We would advise all our readers seeking information regarding seeds to send and procure a copy of their new and beautiful Seed Annual for 1882.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN, as rendered last evening at the opera house, by Geo. E. Stevens' Mammoth Combination, came fully up to the record which has been given to it by the press at large. Of the characters taken too much praise cannot be awarded Little Maud Stevens, as Eva, is a gem in her role, and entered into it with a fine appreciation of its relation to the plot. The closing of the drama, in the transformation scene, was a marvel of beauty and impressiveness, and worth the price of admission. We can heartily commend this combination of talent and superb surroundings, to all who desire to see this drama in its most complete and effective cast, and it is a matter of course that it should everywhere meet with the success it merits.—The Daily Press, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

LAST Thursday afternoon George Rogers, a young man employed in the woolen mills at Clinton, met with a terrible accident. He and another man was descending on the elevator from the third floor. There were some sacks of wool and a truck on the elevator. Rogers was leaning on the truck with the handle under his arm, when the chain which held the elevator broke, precipitating the whole heavy load to the basement, a distance of two stories. The shock broke the handle of the truck and the sharp end penetrated Rogers' left side, entering the thoracic cavity and making a wound eight inches long, so that when he breathed air entered through the wound. Some hopes are entertained of the young man's recovery, although the case is a very serious one.

An Aged Couple.

To-day, Jan. 19th, is the fifty-ninth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. & Mrs. J. S. Hendryx. In one year more, if their lives be spared, they will celebrate their diamond wedding. Mr. Hendryx was born in Madison county, N. Y., May 3d, 1801. In the winter of 1807-8 he moved with his parents into Steuben county and lived there until 1817. During this time he learned the cabinet trade, having been indentured by his father to Elisha G. Hopkins for that purpose. He then went to Seneca county where he lived 18 years. He was married on the 19th day of January, 1823, and in 1840 he moved with his family to Lenawee county. Purchasing a farm of eighty acres in the town of Franklin, he lived there until 1849, when he caught the "gold fever" and joined the Tecumseh Pioneer party which took the overland route to California. He arrived there just in time to vote for the adoption of the first state constitution which saved the state from slavery.—He returned home in good health and with means sufficient to purchase three 80 acre lots adjoining his farm and erect suitable buildings thereon. A few years thereafter, in 1864, he sold out and moved into this village where he has lived ever since. Both himself and wife are in excellent health and are likely to live many years. We sincerely hope they may

A CHRYSTAL WEDDING.

Mr. & Mrs. Alva M. Waring Celebrate their Fifteenth Marriage Anniversary.

Last Monday evening witnessed a large and brilliant company at the residence of Alva M. Waring on Kilbuck st., the occasion being the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of his married life. As Grandmother Sherman remarked, "the house was full from cellar to garret," and we venture to say that a more pleasant company has not assembled in Tecumseh this winter. Both Mr. & Mrs. Waring have been residents of our village and township since their childhood and hence possess an extended circle of relatives and acquaintances, all of whom paid their respects on this occasion. They were the recipients of many elegant and costly gifts, a full list of which is given below.

Old Times.

Joseph H. Patterson, formerly of Raisin, and one of the eight delegates from Lenawee county to the Constitutional Convention of 1835 in Detroit, to form the first State constitution, is now and for several years has been a resident of Cass county. In a letter to Hon. John J. Adam, dated January 10th, he writes that on the 19th inst., he shall be 81 years of age, and is enjoying very good health for a man of his years, and is able to do more or less work most of the time. He lives 2½ miles from Cassopolis, and walks occasionally there and back. He sent his respects to Dr. Howell, of Macon, who like Mr. Adam and himself, was a delegate from this county to the convention of 1835. The only known survivor of that convention, except the above three from this county, is H. G. Wells, of Kalamazoo, the youngest member of that body of 89 delegates.

THE annual meeting of the County Agricultural Society will convene at the city of Adrian on the 27th inst, at 10 o'clock a. m. The good of the society calls for a full attendance of its members and patrons.

AT the Universalist church next Sunday evening, second study of comparative theology and religion. Topic, Ninevah, Babylon, or Babel, their religion and effect on Judiastic and Christian theology.

A POUND social will be held Tuesday evening, Jan. 24th at the residence of Mr. Wm. Osgood, in the town of Macon. The entertainment is for the benefit of the Reform club.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

The M. E. church at Hudson is enjoying a revival.

There are twenty men living in the town of Rome, over seventy-five years of age.

Ninety-two car wheels were cast in one day last week at the car works in Adrian.

A Morenci man killed some turkeys belonging to his neighbor, and which were trespassing on his land. It cost him $11,95.

School Dist. No. 9, of Rome, has had no school for two years because there are no children in the district to send to school.

Mr. Clint. Williams is in receipt of an advantageous offer to travel with Barnum's show next season and exhibit his trained bear.

David Crockett, an Ogden farmer bewails the loss of 25 fine porkers by death from an epidemic that is raging among the hogs of that township.

A meeting of the State Horticultural Society will be held in Hudson next month under the auspices of the Hillsdale and Lenawee Farmers' Union.

The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railway company has designated Dr. H. D. Hull, of Adrian, physician and surgeon of the Detroit & Indianapolis division.

Norman Weaver has started his new wheelbarrow works at Hudson. The success of the enterprise is partly assured by the immediate demand for the article.

The death on the 6th inst., of John R. Hawkins, one of the earliest and most industrious settlers of Rollin, was closely followed on Sunday by the death of E. Trumbull, a man of considerable note of Pittsford.

Deerfield is terribly stirred up over the Dawe scandal. People are getting mad, are calling each other naughty names, and behaving in a very unseemly manner generally. Keep cool, gentlemen; the courts will probably settle the controversy in due time.

The Superintendents of the poor have contracted for medical services of Adrian as follows: At the jail, Dr. H. D. Hull, $45 per year. For poor in the city, $199. At the county house, Dr. D. A. Todd. For the city work Dr. Morden bid $245, and Dr. Kirkpatrick $198,50.

The editor of the Press says he will take wood on subscription but it must be at regular cord wood rates. He does not care to buy wood by the box full. We suppose all publishers of country newspapers have to go thro' with this experience. We have certainly had our share.

They are having lively times in Justices' court over at Hudson. Seven young men were arrested there for disturbing a religious meeting. Two pleaded guilty, and the trial of one other resulted in a disagreement of the jury. It has put a stop to the nuisance complained of.

Morenci Observer: And now comes a letter to Rev. J. Crabbs, from a Mrs. Bates, of Medina, N. Y., wanting to know about the marriage of one P. S. Bates to Miss Bertha Payne last September. She claims that Bates was her husband and had not been divorced, and the particulars of the status and whereabouts of the gay Lothario were desired.

Hudson Gazette: Some strange freaks among editors at the county seat this week. Bonner, of the Record, sat down so hard on an icy walk the people all declared the city was shaken by an earthquake! And mirabile dictu! Dar. Allen, of the Morenci Observer, and Stearns, of the Press, met, and both live. It is said Dar. blessed Willard and called him a "good man" (after the blessing) and that Willard, almost overcome with emotion, presented the "old man" with a copy of that picture of the Michigan Capitol. Let us have peace.

BANK FAILURE.

Our people were startled yesterday morning to learn that the Peoples' Bank had suspended payment. An assignment has been made to E. B. Wood and a detailed statement of the affairs of the bank will be sent to the creditors as soon as one can be prepared. Until the assignee has made a full examination into the affairs of the bank he will be unable to give definite information. This he will do as early as possible as seen by his card below.

A Card.

To the creditors and patrons of the Peoples' Bank of W. C. Fitzsimmons & Co: This bank has made me its assignee for the benefit of its creditors. I am investigating its condition and as soon as I can give intelligent information you shall be advised of the result. I must crave your patience.

E. B. WOOD.

Resolutions of Respect.

At the regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the All-wise Father to remove from our midst sister Ella House, therefore

Resolved, That in the death of our sister our Union has lost an efficient and faithful member; for though her health was such as to compel her to resign the office of Secretary, yet last as long as she could come she was ever present at the meetings and faithful in the discharge of duty which there devolved. May her mantle fall on us and stimulate us to greater faithfulness.

Resolved, That while we greatly deplore our loss we recognize the voice of God calling our sister from labor to reward, and pray that her example of christian courage and pure integrity may lead us to renewed zeal and consecration.

Resolved, That our Union extend to the bereaved family of our sister sincere sympathy in this hour of deep affliction; praying that He, "who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" may tenderly care for the motherless, and grant to the bereaved husband such comfort and strength as he alone can give.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed upon the record of our Union and a copy sent to the HERALD for publication.

Adrian Times: Last week while a man named Leonard Powers was watering a team in the yard of Winship's mill, in Raisin, he was terribly kicked by one of the animals. The injury was very severe, the hoof hitting the right side of the upper jaw. Dr. Rynd who was called in attendance, informs us that it is almost certain the man will lose the right eye, and the injuries are so severe that it may be impossible to save his life. This man is brother to Irving Powers, who lost his life in consequence of injuries received at the grand stand disaster.

Jackson Citizen: The city of Jackson increased its population over 2,000 last year; expended nearly $1,000,000 in blocks, residences and other improvements; enlarged its manufacturing establishments; has six railroads; forty passenger trains each day; has large coal fields; is surrounded by a rich agricultural country; has low taxes; has fine schools; and is a thriving, go-ahead city—just the place to do business in, and an excellent place for a residence.

Curious Weddings.

After dinner, the other night, "curious marriages" were under dicussion at a house where some great travelers were present, and it was hoped that they would favor the company with some of their experience in that line. One, I knew, had had to pursue his bride upon an ostrich over Africa's sands, and another to feed his with blubber in strips, in the neighborhood of the Pole; but on this occassion they were deaf to all entreaties. I have noticed that one traveler will seldom open his mouth—to any interesting extent at least—in the presence of another, for which, doubtless, they have their reasons.

"It is a pity," whispered a great navigator to me, the other day, when another great navigator was venturing upon an experience, "that a man who has really done great things should tell such very strange adventures, because they throw discredit on even what he has done."

Upon this occasion an old gentleman [illegible] explorers by relating [illegible] nuptials of Miss Biffin, which took place not so far away, indeed, but so long ago that the details were beyond the reach of criticism. This lady was conspicuous in her time for the absence of her limbs—but for all that she attended the fashionable assemblies. One night she was forgotten by her friends, and left in the ball room, with the lights out. Alarmed by her cries, the head waiter rushed into the room, and inquired who was there. From the dark depts of the assembly room, a female voice replied:

"It is I. I want to go home."

"Then step this way, ma'am you can surely see the door."

"Alas! I have no legs."

The waiter was a kindly man, and ventured into the darkness. "If you will hold out your hand, ma'am, I will pick you up and carry you out."

"Alas! I have neither hands nor arms."

On which the waiter fled, under the impression that it was the devil.

Our old gentleman saw, or said he saw, this lady married—she was married, poor creature, to a vile adventurer, who ran through her money and left her to starve—and described the circumstances.

"But where did her husband put the ring?" asked one of the audience, a man that is never satisfied with what is sufficient for other people, and who has no respect for age.

Our old gentleman remained silent, delving in the ruins of his memory for this immaterial circumstance.

Then a censorious young fellow stepped in. "I seem to remember reading some account of how a hole was drilled through the lady's nose, sir, after the fashion of African brides; but perhaps I am mistaken."

"No, no, you are quite right," exclaimed the old gentleman, rapturously. "You have recalled the detail to my recollection; the wedding ring was put through her nose."

The most striking marriage of modern times took place just after the overthrow of the Commune in Paris. It was a double one, and each bridegroom had for his best men two gendarmes, and each lady, for her bridemaids, two female prison wardens. The happy pairs parted at the church door, to meet again in the convict settlement of New Caledonia. The men were "lifers," and would have been debarred the solace of matrimony forever but for the circumstance that their sweethearts possessed certain secrets of great value to the police. A bargain was struck with the State, by which the two pairs of lovers were thus made happy at the expense of the criminal classes. It is therefore possible, it seems, to combine a love match with a "marriage of convenience."

What a Fire Policy Covers.

Fire insurance policies do not include in their indemnity, among other things, the following: "Fences and other fixtures, and plate-glass doors and windows when the plates are of the dimensions of three feet or more."

It is important that this fact be mentioned in the wording of the policy, if such articles are to be included under the policy. Careless, ignorant, or unsophisticated brokers and agents frequently mak mistakes in this respect.

The following articles are also not included in the security of a fire insurance policy, unless mentioned, viz.: jewelry, plate, watches, musical instruments, ornaments, medals, curiosities, patterns, printed books, printed music, engravings, printings, picture frames, sculpture, casts and models, money or bullion bills, notes, accounts, deeds, evidence of debt, or securities. These should always be specified.

If a building falls, no insurance will attach, or cover its loss, unless it is caused by fire.

Stolen property is not to be paid for by the insurance company.

Losses from explosions are not to be paid, unless fire ensues, and then only the actual fire loss is to be settled for.

Property standing on leased ground must be so represented to the company and expressed in the policy.

Goods on storage must be insured as such.

The assured, in case of a fire, must invariably do his best to save, and carelessness in this respect will vitiate his claim. In no instance shall he abandon his premises to firemen or thieves.

Where a party has a reliable and intelligent representative, agent or broker, whose business it is to study these points, and consult his own and the assured's interest by so doing, it is sometimes safer than risk it by attending to the insurance himself.—Insurance Reporter.

Sleep for Children.

There is no danger that children can sleep too much. The old proverb, "Who sleeps, eats," is illustrated in those little ones who sleep most. Wakeful children are always peevish, irritable and lean. If they can be induced to sleep abundantly they are quite likely to become good natured and plump. Their sleep should be as much during the hours of darkness as possible, and therefore it is better that they should go to bed before sunset to have their sleep out, than to lie long after sunrise in the morning. It is well to let any healthful, growing child or young person sleep until he wakes himself, and then give him such a variety and amount of out-door exercise as shall make him glad when bedtime returns.

A pure, wholesome distillation of witch hazel, American pine, Canada fir, marigold, clover blossoms, etc., fragrant with the healing essences of balsam and of pine. Such is Sanford's Radical Cure for Catarrh. Complete treatment for $1.

Sharp Eyes.

The power of observation is given to each person alike; but, although they are so gifted, many go through life seeing comparatively little of what lies before them. The world is full of beauty, and it is also full of suffering; their vision is blind to both facts alike. Having eyes, they see not, and never know how much they have lost of enjoyment, or the pleasure there is in alleviating the sorrows of others. An observing person will oftentimes find that which, to the casual passer-by, seems to be naught, yet proves to be of great value when keen eyes fall on it. The rich variegated ore in the mountains of Colorado were in plain sight of all that passed that way, and thousands were looking for something else, or nothing at all, and did not see them. Some man come along, who used his eyes in the way they were intended, by looking closely at what was, before him; and behold! the riches of the earth were his. He also found that [illegible] willing to help him in claiming the silver. Thus he not only benefited himself, but others, also, with his sharp eyes. Some persons will plod along through life and see literally nothing, while others walking in the same path, will fallow after, with an eye on the lookout for what might happen to be of use to him, and be rewarded for his patience. The first will wonder why he did not see and improve the chance, and mourn because he is always so unlucky. It is so easy to place the responsibility on the word "unlucky," and it sometimes gets blamed for what is generally the person's own fault. But men's foresight is very often faulty, and many a poor mortal is terribly deceived simply because he did not use his eyesight. This false world is full of deceit and shams to catch the unwary when they are least expecting it. It gives intense satisfaction to some people to think they have been able to gain an advantage over some one less sharp-sighted than themselves. A keen eye while it brings pleasure to its possessor by enabling him to see much that would otherwise be hidden, also shows him much of misery and sufferin. Often there lies beneath the smiling countenance, which is worn as a mask, a heart filled with pain and anguish—a heart well nigh broken with its burden of sorrow, aching for a word of sympathy to be spoken to give it rest, but which never comes. Enjoyment and sorrow, pain and pleasure, walk hand in hand; and those who can aid the one or lessen the other are to be envied, for they have their reward; and those who use a keen eye to add to the knowledge of others, feel a gratification which but few understand.

Not Open to that Objection.

Temperance people often say that most of the popular medicines they see advertised are nine-tenths rum.—That is true of many, but not of Dr. David Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy.' The Dr. agrees with his temperance friends that it is better to die of disease than of drink. 'Favorite Remedy' cures, Kidney Troubles, Liver Complaints, Costipation of the Bowels, as nothing else does or ever did.—It drives away sickness. It cools the blood. It costs only a Dollar to try it. Ask your Druggist or send to the Doctor at Rondout, N. Y.

A Great Wheat State.

Characteristic conversation in Minnesota: "Let me see, they raise some wheat in Minnesota, don't they?" "Raise wheat! who raises wheat? No, sir, decidedly no, sir. It raises itself. If we undertook to raise wheat in this state it would run us out. There wouldn't be any place to put our houses." "But I've been told the grasshoppers take a good deal of it." "Of course they do. If they didn't I don't know what we should do. The cussed stuff would run all over the state and drive us out—choke us up. Those grasshoppers are a God-send, only there ain't half enough of them." "Is that wheat nice and plump?" "Plump! Well, I don't know what you call plump wheat, but there are seventeen in our family, including the servants, and when we want bread we just go out and bring in a kernel of wheat and bake it." "Do you ever soak it in water first?" "Oh, no, it wouldn't do; it would swell a little and then we couldn't get it into our range oven."—Schoharie Republican.

SILVER CREEK, N.Y., Feb. 6, 1880.

Gents—I have been very low, and have tried everything, to no advantage. I heard your Hop Bitters recommended by so many, I concluded to give them a trial. I did, and now am around and constantly improving, and am nearly as strong as ever.

W. H. WELLER.

Little by Little.

"If you are gaining a little every day, be contented. Are your expenses less than your income, so that, though it be little, you are yet constantly accumulating and growing richer and richer every day? Be contented; so far as concerns money, you are doing well.

"Are you gaining knowledge every day. Though it be little by little, the aggregate accumulation, where no day is permitted to pass without adding something to the stock, will be surprising to yourself.

"Solomon did not become the wisest man in the world in a minute. Little by little—never omitting to learn something even for a single day—always reading, always studying a little between the time of rising in the morning and laying down at night; this is the way to accumulate a full store-house of knowledge.

"Finally, are you daily improving in character? Be not discouraged because it is little by little. The best men fall short of what they would wish to be. It is something, it is much, if you keep good resolutions better to-day than you did yesterday, better this week than you did last, better this year than you did last year. Strive to be perfect, but do not become down-hearted as long as you are approaching nearer and nearer to the high standard at which you aim.

"Little by little, fortunes are accumulated; little by little, knowledge is gained; little by little, character and reputation are achieved."

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the Capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independence, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

Stone in the Bladder Expelled by Using Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Duchess, Co. N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who he said would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried Favorite Remedy at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ½ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipestem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The cost was trifling; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit, or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

Corns on Horses' Feet.

Corns on horses are different from those on the skin of a human being. They are first produced by blows or bruises, which start inflammation and formation of matter under the sole, or cause a deposit of horny matter which is very painful upon the sensitive inner parts of the foot. They are frequent in ill-shoeing horses, the frogs of whose feet have been pared away so as to bring the sole to the ground and subject it to constant bruises from stones. The usual method of shoeing is one that protects the tender portion of the sole from blows in traveling. This is to put a shoe of sole leather under the iron shoe and stuff under the leather with tow, soaked in glycerine, to keep the sole cool and moist. If the sole is very tender, the feet should be prepared for shoeing by keeping them upon a puddle of wet clay for a few days, and by frequent dressing of cold water, and by giving the horse a cooling medicine, as eight to twelve ounces of epsom salts.

F. H. Drake's Sufferings.

F. H. Drake, Esq., Detroit, Mich., suffered beyond all description from a skin disease, which appeared on his hands, head and face, and nearly destroyed his eyes. The most careful doctoring failed to help him, and after all had failed he used the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally, Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and was cured, and has remained perfectly well to this day.

A Help to the Eyes.

Reading is rendered easy, and fatigue to eyes very much relieved, by a simple device. Get a slip of mica about three inches broad and six inches long, such as is used for filling in the little windows of stoves. Place this over the page and move it along so as to cover the lines as you read. A larger plate of the isinglass may be employed, so as to cover the whole page if desired. The white surface is pleasantly shaded, and a book may be read in open sunlight or by bright lamplight witout fatigue. If the reader desires, he may cover the mica slip with a light coat of green varnish. This is better than green goggles, and may be used with profit by the over-worked student and the consumer of endless novels.

At the opening of the Guiteau trial Saturday the prisoner said that he received checks Friday representing $15,000. Judge Cox denied him the privilege of addressing the jury, but gave his counsel permission to read anything from his manuscript which they thought proper. Charles H. Reed occupied the day in an address to the jury. Before he had been speaking half an hour, the prisoner began to comment and contradict. Contrasting the conduct of the Savior toward those afflicted with devils (insane), with the demands of the prosecution of this cash, Reed said: "They say, hang him!"

Guiteau shouted: "And the American people say 'Let him go!' The American people are on my side. Reed, now go on with your speech."

Soon after the speaker had occasion to allude to the evidence of J. W. Guiteau, when the prisoner again interrupted, and called out, despairingly: "Well, he ain't my reference; I've got better men than he is for my reference."

Mr. Reed stated it as his opinion that if the prisoner was sent to an asylum he would be a driveling idiot within six months. He referred to the difficulty of getting witnesses to come to testify what they knew as to Guiteau's insanity. He claimed that the prisoner's father was insane on religious subjects.

In conclusion, Mr. Reed said: Gentlemen of the jury, you should when you were sworn that you would be governed by the evidence and stand up to it without regard to the effect it might have upon you and your business. I advise you to keep that oath. Falter not in the performance of a duty which shall save you and this land from eternal disgrace. Assert that the conviction of this man to the gallows and his execution would be an infamy beyond description, an indelible stain on American jurisprudence and American juries. Imagine the scene if you condemn him to the gallows. Though not present in body to see the sight, you cannot but be there in mind. If such a day will ever come, and I do not believe it ever can come, under this evidence,—think of this man brought out from his cell, with the same pale face, the same weary, wandering eyes; the officers of the law gathering around him, pinioning him, binding him with cords, so that his muscles stand out; covering him with the black hood, shutting out the light of day from him, and leading him to the scaffold.

The prisoner—I would rather go that way than be smashed up in railroad cars, as some poor fellows were last night.

Mr. Reed (continuing)—Think of him, a lunatic, condemned to the gallows; a lunatic whom the Savior, if he were on earth, would heal. The picture is not overdrawn. I am very much obliged to you for your attention. I only ask you, pray do that which shall not in after years bring a blush of shame to your cheeks.

The prisoner—Reed is a good fellow, but I would not give a cent a bushel for his rubbish. If I could only have a talk with that jury I would give them the right theory.

On Sunday Guiteau gave his address intended for the jury to the associated press for publication. It is a long and rambling screed, in which he insists that he was divinely inspired to commit the crime, inviting the Deity and the doctors responsible for Garfield's death, and warns the American people of the wrath in store for them if he is not honorably acquitted.

He closes his address as follows: Two months ago you left your homes and loved ones to listen to this case. I have no doubt but you have given it your most solemn and prayerful attention, and that your verdict will be: "Not guilty as charged in the indictment." To hang a man in my mental condition on July 2, when I fired on the president, would be a lasting disgrace to the American people, and I am sure you so understand it. The American people do not want me hung. They are saying: "Well, if the Deity did it, let it go," and I expect you gentlemen will let it go. The mothers and daughters of the republic are praying that you will vindicate my inspiration, and their prayers I expect will prevail. A woman's instinct is keener than a man's, and I pray you to listen to the prayers of these ladies. How would your mother, and wife, and daughter vote on this case? Have you any doubt that they would vote for acquittal, and why should you not do likewise?

There is not the first element of murder in this case. You might as well hang a man for murder during the war as to hang me under the law as given by his honor. You can acquit with entire credit to yourself—physical death has no terrors for me. Suppose it possible that I should be sentenced, to be hung in 30 days, I may die in six hours. I shall not go until my time comes anyway. I have always been a praying man, and I think I stand well with the Deity. I am sure I do in this case, for I certainly should never have sought to remove the president had the Deity not pressed me into it. It is said that if I knew the difference between right and wrong in removing the president, I violated human law and ought to be hung, but this is not the law, and I say the president's removal was right, because I had divine authority to do it.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JAN. 11.—A large number of petitions were submitted for a commission to inquire into the liquor traffic. Mr. Morgan submitted a resolution directing the committee on woman suffrage to report a bill to annul any law conferring upon women in Utah the right to vote.

Mr. Anthony introduced a bill providing for the retirement of any person who has served for fifty years or upward in either house of congress.

The Sherman funding bill was taken up, and Mr. Vest declared that the democratic measure of last year would have saved the people $15,000,000 annually in interest; that the payment of the public debt would sink our national banks, and the latter do not intend to surrender their charters. Mr. Sherman replied that the banks were subject to the will of congress, and that it is fortunate that the bill of last year failed.

Mr. Brown offered a resolution, which was laid over, supplying each senator not a chairman of a committee with a clerk.

JAN. 12—Mr. Vest, of the commerce committee, reported the senate bill authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri river near St. Charles, Mo. Several amendments were agreed to and the bill passed.

Mr. Ingalls took the floor to defend the arrears of pensions act, which was attacked by Senator Beck in his speech the other day. Mr. Ingalls said if there was anything wrong in that act or the method of its passage, Mr. Beck should have exposed it before its passage. He offered a resolution declaring it the sense of the senate that the arrears of pensions act should not be repealed. Mr. Beck asked that the resolution lie over, saying that he would endeavor to present some facts showing that the act was passed under all sorts of misrepresentations. Mr. Ingalls gave notice that he would, upon every occasion that he could get the floor, ask for a vote on his resolution.

The Sherman bond bill was further discussed by Plumb, Vest, and Sherman, and an amendment was offered by Davis (W. Va.) that none of the bonds shall be called in and redeemed until bonds bearing a higher rate of interest are paid off, and that nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase of the public debt.

Mr. Plumb offered a further amendment that, when national bank notes are surrendered and the bonds therefor are withdrawn, greenbacks to a like amount shall be issued in their place, and the bank notes shall not be paid. Without concluding the discussion of the bill the senate at 4:30 p. m. went into executive session, and a few minutes later adjourned to Monday next. While the doors were closed, the clerk appeared with the census deficiency bill, which was received and referred to the appropriation committee, which will report it back on Monday.

HOUSE.

JAN. 11.—Mr. Orth offered a resolution instructing the committee on civil-service reform to report a different mode of appointing committees. After a spirited contest the resolution was referred to the committee on rules. Mr. Haskell, on question of privilege, presented a resolution declaring that no polygamist is entitled to admission to the house as a delegate, but the house voted that the resolution did not present a privileged question. Mr. Burrows presented a bill to define the qualifications of territorial delegates, making polygamists ineligible, but General Singleton objected.

Mr. Willis offered a resolution calling on the secretary of war for information as to what additional work is necessary at the falls of the Ohio river to complete the improvement thereof. Adopted.

Mr. Cobb offered a resolution calling on the secretary of the interior for the names of all business firms and persons who prosecute claims for pensions before the department. Adopted.

Mr. Robinson introduced a bill to declare certain lands granted to railroad companies forfeited.

A contest arose as to whether the bill belonged to the committee on public lands, or that on Pacific railroads.

Pending the decision, the speaker laid before the house a message from the president, transmitting a communication from the secretary of the interior relative to the sale of certain Indian lands in Fort Hall military reservation; a letter from the secretary of the treasury transmitting a statement of expenditures under the appropriation for contingent expenses of the treasury department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1881; a letter from the secretary of the treasury transmitting the annual report of the national board of health; the report of the managers of national homes for disabled volunteers, and a memorial of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in reference to polygamy. All referred.

JAN. 12.—The house met at noon. Mr. Robeson, from the committee on rules, presented a report making changes in the number of members of various committees.

Mr. Pacheco offered a resolution asking the president for instructions to the United States representative at Hayti relative to the claims of a certain Pelletier.

Mr. Brown (Ind.) offered a bill providing for the issue of $10,000,000 fractional currency by the government. Referred.

At 1:15 the house went into committee of the whole, Mr. Calkins in the chair, to consider the bill appropriating $540,000 to complete and publish the census special statistics.

Mr. Prescott (N. Y.) introduced a bill readjusting the membership of the house under the late census. It adds twenty-three to the members of the house, making a total of 319, and gives one additional member to Arkansas, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia, each; two to California, Michigan, Minnesota and Nebraska, each; three to Kansas, four to Texas, and reduces the number from New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, one each, making no change in the others.

The house at 6 p. m. unanimously passed the census deficiency bill, appropriating $540,000 to complete the work of the census, and adjourned until Monday.

Brooklyn Eagle: "How much will this cost in your paper?" asked a quiet looking man; as he handed in the following advertisement at the Eagle's counting room yesterday:

SMITH—Busted a trace, in this city, Friday, just after dinner, Mary Smith, wife of the undersigned, and daughter of old Sam Pratt, the leading blacksmith of Denver, Colorado. The corpse was highly respected by the high tou'dest families, but Death got the drop on her, and she took up the bucket with perfect confidence that she would have a square show the other side of the divide. The plant transpires this afternoon at their boarding house on Willow street. Come one, come all.

Dearest Mary, thou hast left us,
For you on earth there wasn't room;
But 'tis Heaven that has bereft us,
And snatched our darling up the flume.

Denver papers please copy and send bill, or draw at sight. By her late husband. P. SMITH.

THE postmaster general has decided that a husband has no right to get his wife' letters from the postoffice, even should he suspect the correspondence covers a common intrigue. This will be very gratifying to a number of our village ladies, who are in the habit of corresponding with gentlemen friends.

LAST month is said to have been the warmest December since 1847.

Hudson Gazette: When Mr. H. W. Dean and family started for the opera house on Monday evening they left a bracket lamp burning over the table at home. Late in the evening they returned to find the domicil dark, pieces of the lamp scattered about on the floor, and books, papers, the table, carpet and wall badly burned. It seems the lamp had fallen and broken and scattered the oil about, causing the incipient conflagration. It is wonderful that a more serious fire did not result from the accident—the flame dying out after injuring property to the amount of $10.

A Business Man's Experience.

He could not tell what ailed him.—He knew his digestion was poor and his heart palpitated. He felt his nervous system was shattered. He knew his urine was milky and ropy, but he had suffered from these disorders for years. Only of late had he began to feel himself completely exhausted and his nervous system shattered, and his constitution broken down. A friend recommended Brown's Iron Bitters. It suited his case precisely, and now he is as healthy, robust and strong as his heart could desire. Go thou and do likewise, then may you live long and be happy.—Commercial.

BROOKLYN.

Three weeks is long enough time to devote to grieving over a loss that life to come affords leisure to repair, so I am going to throw away mourning, gather up what is left and see what kind of a web I can weave of broken threads of destiny. A woman always has to do that spiritually and I have such a good chance to twist a romantic theory into a band for the practical machinery of everyday life that I can't afford to lose it. Somebody said adversity shows us more of the brightness of existence than prosperity ever can. If by that he meant the former shows us who our friends are, I have had positive proof that the assertion is true.

There has been an insurance company on the ground in person, from first to last, and the safest association I ever invested in.

I have always suspected something wrong in the platform of people who are forever distrusting the motives that prompt to good actions, and now I am sure there is a loose plank in it, for there is not the slightest prospect of gaining ten cents by flattering my vanity now, which does much towards spoiling the mainspring of selfish civility. The Watertown Insurance Co. have not been remiss in redeeming their pledge. It is usually said that women know so little of business, that they are dissatisfied when the fancied value they attach to the loss is reduced to a cash basis. To that accusation we plead not guilty. Mr. Hough has been equally just to the interests of those he represents, and to ours, and I only regret there should have been any cause for arbitration between his friends and PEARLIE.

RIDGEWAY.

The ice harvest has come.

The local telegraph line has been extended down South street.

Miss Jennie Kilpatrick is conducting a successful term of school in the Montgomery district.

John Boyd has completed one of the finest barns in this locality and is now preparing to build a horse barn and granary.

Chet Bronson, who has been in the employ of W. R. Wilson for two years has rented the Service farm near Clinton for five years.

At the regular meeting of the temperance alliance next Sunday evening, Rev. Jessie Kilpatrick will give a lecture on temperance. Something good may be expected.

Remember the donation at the church next Wednesday evening.

The church social will be held at the residence of S. H. Linn next Friday evening. The last one was held at the parsonage and a good time was enjoyed.

Cornelius Pocklington was married last week Thursday evening to a daughter of Ned Broadbent.

The farmers of this township should all interest themselves in the coming state institute to be held at Grange hall, Macon, on the 2d and 3d of February next. It is not often that an institute is held so near, and considering the fact that several noted agriculturalists will deliver lectures, there will no doubt be a general turn out from this town.

There perhaps has never been a family in this community more sorely afflicted than that of Jacob Cheever at present. Leander, the oldest son, yielded to that dreaded disease, consumption, a few weeks since, and almost immediately afterward nearly all of the family were prostrated with malarial, typhoid or lung fever. Last Friday morning James, aged 17 yrs., the youngest of the family died at his mother's house a half mile south of the village. On Monday morning a dispatch from Dundee announced the death of Louise, aged 22 yrs. At this writing Mrs. Laura Cheever, the mother, and another daughter, Mrs. Lewis Priest are very sick and may not recover. The sympathy of the community is awakened as it has not been for a long time.

The marriage of Cornelius Pocklington and Sarah A. Broadbent which took place at the residence of the bride's parents on the 19th inst. was quite a notable event in the circles of Ridgeway society. The ceremony was performed by Rev. De Spelder, who is an adept at tying matrimonial knots, and the company assembled were elegantly entertained.—The gifts presented on the occasion are given below:

Mr. John Pocklington, $5 cash.
Mrs. Broadbent, ½ doz. silver spoons.
Mr. Broadbent, $5.
Mrs. J. Pocklington, ½ doz. silver spoons.
Geo. Pocklington & wife, bed spread.
Mr. & Mrs. C. A. Pocklington, lamp.
Mrs. Dorlisco Freer, water pitcher and goblet.
Mr. & Mrs. Allen Kelly, sauce dish and table mats.
Mr. & Mrs. John Garlinghouse, ½ doz. silver forks.
Mr. Jesse Hanchet, egg beater.
B. A. & B. J. Garlinghouse, ½ doz. silver spoons.
Mrs. E. Bentley, set silver knives and forks.
Mr. W. J. Binns, silver butter dish.
Mr. & Mrs. Chas. Kelly, silver pickle fork.

CLINTON.

Several Clinton people attended the lecture of John B. Gough at Adrian last Monday evening.

Miss Lua Rowland, of Albion, Mich. and Miss Carrie Reed, of South Bend, Ind., have been visiting Miss Genevieve Lancaster of this place.

Miss Laura Clark has been quite seriously ill. Diphtheria was at first apprehended but all fears of that are now removed, and she is recovering.

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Couch, of Jackson, spent Sunday with Clinton friends. Mr. Couch now holds the position of general superintendent at the Southern depot in the above named city.

Mr. George McConnell, who for nearly six months has been bedridden from paralysis, has for the last few weeks been slowly improving, until Monday night, when he was taken suddenly worse. His recovery is considered doubtful.

G. W. Lewis, former superintendent of the woolen mill, has accepted a position as partner and overseer in a like establishment at South Bend.—One with the ability and business principles of Mr. Lewis cannot fail in any undertaking, and his friends feel confident of his entire success.

Demuth & Bush have dissolved partnership. We understand Mr. Bush is to enter Brown's hardware store as clerk. S. W. will play a lone hand.

HOLLOWAY.

Kelley & Co. shipped three car loads of hay to Philadelphia last week.

James Sutherland and Floyd Florence have purchased lots at Holloway intending to put up dwelling houses in the spring.

Kelly & Co. have a new clerk from Palmyra.

The parlor concert last Friday evening was a success financially as well as socially. Enough was made to more than pay the indebtedness on the organ.

Although the night was stormy the attendance at the Literary meeting last Saturday evening was the largest we have had. No meeting will be held this week on account of the social at W. E. Doty's on Friday evening.

THE Circuit Court opened last Tuesday for the trial of jury cases. The case of Jones vs. the Lake Shore R. R. was called, and it was on trial Tuesday and yesterday.

THE Young Men's Christian Association of Michigan will hold a convention in Jackson Feb. 23d.

EAST RIDGEWAY.

The young people's benevolent and literary society formed by the Rev. C. C. Sink at the Christian church now numbers about 50 members. The exercises last Wednesday evening called out a large attendance, and the readings were very commendable.

The oyster supper at the Christian church Thursday evening the 12th, was a success.

On Wednesday afternoon the Rev. C. C. Sink united in matrimony Mr. Joseph D. Smith and Miss Ida L. Dean of Dundee.

Not less than half a dozen new buildings will be erected at Britton early in the spring. We have already two stores, a stave factory, lumber yard, blacksmith shop, and will soon have a commodious boarding house. About 50 cords of stave bolts are delivered daily on the yards upon an average, and the place will soon become a point of no small interest.

The congregations at the Christian church are large and attentive when the roads are passable and the society prides itself on its excellent financial basis.

An oyster supper will be given this week to all who have contributed to the first 1000 cords of stave bolts at the new factory, and it is rumored that quite a number who have not contributed any as yet, will do so during the week for the sake of the oysters.

FRANKLIN.

The annual meeting of the Franklin Sheep Breeders and Wool Growers' association convened last Friday, when the following officers were chosen for the coming year:

Pres.—J. R. Keeney.
Sec.—E. L. Mills.
Treas.—A. W. Simmons.
Ex. Com.—Henry Wilson, Walt Osborn, W. R. Keeney, Wm. Witherall, E. L. Mills.

More than usual interest was manifested and every effort will be made to make the public shearing the coming spring more successful than ever. It was resolved to assess foreign exhibitors only one-half as much as the members.

Services will be held at the Congregational church next Sabbath.

Chas. Campbell has been on the sick list for several days.

A. J. Hunter and wife of Cherokee are still among their friends in Franklin.

Next social at Mrs. E. L. Mills.

W. R. Keeney has sold his farm we understand for $85 per acre. That is certainly dirt cheap.

LETTER FROM DELAWARE.

McDONOUGH, DELAWARE,
January 18, 1882.

DEAR EDITOR:

We live in a world of changes, and little can we tell what a year, month, or even a day may bring forth. Time flies so fast that the present is soon numbered with the past, and the immediate past reaches "the long ago," before we are aware of its flight. Six months have nearly rolled away since I bade adieu to my native town, the friends and scenes of my boyhood, to make my home in "Little Delaware." In that short space of time, your dear paper has chronicled many changes; I learn from it of their departure to their long resting place of a number of my warm friends, and of other marked changes in places and loved ones dear to me from the early associations of youth.

To-day I find my home on the banks of the noble and historic Delaware. From my window I can view the white-winged messengers of commerce go floating up and down that beautiful river. The great ocean steamer, after having battled with the mountain billows and the furious storms, carries within itself an association, to me, of great interest I frequently find myself upon the sandy beach watching them as they pass, and wondering what a history they might tell could they but speak.

My present home is situated in what is called here "St. George's Hundred." There no division lines are known as townships in Delaware.—McDonough cannot be called a village but simply the corners, containing store, post office, wagon and blacksmith shops. It takes its name from the great commodore, the hero of Lake Champlain, who resided and died here. Two miles north-east of my farm is Port Penn, the point where William Penn first landed, and founded a settlement, in 1682, two hundred years ago. Four miles to the south-east is Delaware Bay, which was discovered by Hendrick or Henry Hudson, an Englishman in the service of the Dutch, in 1609, and in the following year was visited by Lord De-la-wan or Delawarr, then governor of Virginia, from whom Delaware received its name. You can therefore see this is not a new country; two centuries have passed since its sod was first broken by the farmer, and its soil, though so long cultivated, will to-day produce every valuable crop that can be grown at the north or west.

Game in the greatest variety abounds. On the land are found partridges, snipe, woodcock, wild pigeons, rabbits and squirrels. Of water-fowls are vast flocks of wild geese and ducks.—Of fish, shad, herring, rock, sturgeon, tailors, trout, croakers and perch, caught at all seasons by traps, weirs, the seine, or hook and line. In the way of shell fish there are large and abundant beds of oysters, hard and soft crabs, terrapins and turtles. You take your choice and have your dish. Call down and see us and we will tickle your palate with Devilled Crab or boiled Eels. The favorite dish for our colored brethren is musk-rat and crow. No insinuations, however.

So far I am well pleased with my new home, but will not say fully satisfied until I have passed the four seasons here. In point of location, as to market, there is none better; within one and a half hours' ride to Philadelphia, two and a half to Baltimore, three and a half to New York and Washington. I am inclined to believe that there will always be a ready and remunerative sale for all that the farm may raise. The winter thus far has been mild. We receive your paper regularly and consider its weekly visits like those of a much loved friend. P.W.A

Pain and weakness of lungs, liver, kidneys, and urinary organs relieved by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

THE DAYS THAT ARE NO MORE.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depths of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather in the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn fields
And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange, as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feign'd
On lips that are for others; deep as love—
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
Oh, death in life! the days that are no more.

CHANCE.

A word unspoken, a hand unpressed,
A look unseen, or a thought unguessed;
And souls that were kindred may live apart,
Never to meet or know the truth,
Never to know how heart beat with heart
In the dim past days of a wasted youth.

She shall not know how his pulses leapt
When over his temples her tresses swept;
As she leaned to give him the jasmine wreath
She felt his breath, and her face flushed red
With the passionate love that choked her breath,
And saddens her life now her youth is dead.

A faded woman who waits for death,
And murmurs a name beneath her breath;
A cynical man who scoffs and jeers
At woman and love in the open day,
And at night-time kisses with bitter tears
A faded fragment of jasmine sprays.

THE BALLAD SINGER.

"Oh mother, I'm so thirsty!" and a feverish little face was held up to the poor worn-looking woman, who brought a broken glass containing water to the side of the bed as the child called her.

"I wish father would come: he said he'd bring me an orange;" and Bessie sank back, and began again her restless tossing from side to side, while every sound on the stairs brought an eager, expectant look on her pinched features, as if she was waiting for some one.

The mother sighed. She had long since lost all trust in her husband's promises, for the love of strong drink had taken hold of him.

Hours went by, but no father came to the expectant Bessie, who moaned with pain, and turned away from the bread which was all mother had to give. Not a penny was in the house, no fire, no food for the sick child, and poor Mary Brien sat with her infant in her arms, trying to hush its cries, as she pondered how she might earn a few pence to get food for Bessie; she could not leave the children and go to work, even if she had been strong enough. She had not a friend in all the great city to help her, for she was a stranger and country bred. Only a month before her husband had brought her to London with the promise of keeping from the vice which had disgraced him in his own village. That month had been a time of worse suffering than before. Not only had Brien given way to drink, but Mary herself had been ill and laid aside, and now Bessie grew worse daily for the want of proper food.

All this the poor woman thought over during the long day hours, and she could see but one course for her—she had still a clear, sweet voice; and shameful and degrading as it seemed to her, she resolved, as evening fell, to go out into the streets, and try thus to earn something, if only a penny, with which to buy Bessie her orange.

"Mother'll not be long dear," she said, bending down to her sick child, as she fastened her shawl around her with trembling fingers. "Mother is going to get you an orange, and she'll soon be back."

A faint smile passed over the little face, and Bessie lay still, listening as her mother went down the dark creaking stairs, with the baby in her arms, and out into the sharp night air. The child was content, knowing that the promise would be kept.

Once in the street, poor Mary Brien walked on a few yards, in doubt where to go. It must be somewhere away from her wretched room, in some place where mothers lived with happy, well-fed children, in comfortable homes—mothers whose heart God might touch with pity for the singer. On she went, till streets and courts, and dirty, fever-striken alleys were left behind; turning into a quiet road where she saw light shining from behind drawn curtains, she began with a trembling voice to sing a little ballad she had sung in her girlhood, many a time, as she worked by her mother's side in her country home. No one heeded the singer—the song was ended, and no voice called her. What was she to do? A picture of Bessie lying on her miserable bed rose before the poor mother—of Bessie crying with pain and weariness.

"O God, have mercy on me! Send help to me in my great need," was the cry of the burdened heart, and once more Mary Brien sang—an old plantive song; and now there was no trembling in the tones of her voice—something seemed to tell her she had not asked God's help in vain. Presently a curtain was drawn back from a window, and a fair little face appeared.

Back now, to the narrow streets and passages—but oh, how light was her heart! Sixpence in her hand, besides pieces of meat, bread and other things wrapped in a parcel and carried under her shawl. What riches it seemed! Entering a shop, Mrs. Brien bought two oranges, and took them up to the waiting child, who smiled so gladly at the sight.

"It was God's doings, Bessie," said the poor mother. "I'm afraid I've been forgetting Him a long time, and yet he is good to me. I asked him to touch some one's heart and He did it."

"Perhaps He would make father good if you asked, mother," said the dear child, forgetting for the moment her delight.

Far into the night Mary Brien thought of these words as she waited for her husband's step, yet waited in vain. Never yet had she made that prayer to God; but she made it then, and asked that her husband might be brought back to his own self—the steady honest man he had been when she married him.

A week went by, and nothing was heard of Brien. Again and again his wife went out in the evening to sing, for thus only could she find a way of earning bread; for though sometimes she brought back only a few pence, she never came empty-handed. But her prayer for her husband remained unanswered—God's time had not yet come. Meantime Bessie's little life failed fast—no food, no care could help her now, the doctor said one evening as he went away from the poorly-furnished attic. All that night Mary Brien sat by her dying child, with tears falling down her thin cheeks. As morning dawned, heavy footsteps came up the narrow stairs, straight to the room where Bessie lay half conscious, but it roused her.

"Father, father!" she cried, as the door opened, and Brien staggered in. "You didn't bring my orange, but mother did. She went and sang, and God made the rich people sorry for her. Oh, father! be good to her, for she has been praying for it, and there'll be no one but you left, except the baby, for I'm dying;" and the dear child sank back exhausted.

The last word went a good way to sober Brien. Dying! his little Bessie dying! He had cared for her once, until the horrid drink had drowned every good and fatherly feeling; now he rose with unsteady steps to the bedside.

"Bess—look at me," he said. "I'll bring thee an orange, I don't want to be a bad father to thee. I'll mind that, I will!" but the child's eyes had closed forever on the world, and she would need no love or care from parents again.

For days Brien sat in a heavy, silent grief in a darkened room, thinking remorsefully of the past. It was then he saw the sin and folly of the course he had been following; it was there, by his child that he promised never again to give away to the vice which had brought misery and suffering to little Bessie. Nor did he promise in vain; for that was the beginning of better days, and Mary Brien could now rejoice that God had heard her prayer and saved her husband.

It was not long before once more they had their tidy rooms, in which several other children were born to them; and though they were often hard-pressed and anxious, they never again sank down into the misery and distress which had taken Mary Brien out as a singer in the London streets to get an orange for little feverish Bessie.

Sometimes the children wonder why mother can always spare a half-penny for a poor street-singer when she hears one. They don't know the story we have told, and mother feels as if perhaps her little help may be part of the answer God is giving to the cry of suffering, which goes up from an aching and troubled heart.

The Unfortunate Man's Advice.

"The Five Silver Donkeys," was related to me, says a correspondent, by the minister of a foreign power, at the court of St. James. A very wealthy man of the Hebrew faith, finding himself near his end, called his five sons to his bedside and presented each with a silver donkey, equipped with panniers, and said: "There was a merchant traveling from Basira to Bagdad with a cargo of silk, but as this, however, was not sufficient to fill more than one end of the panniers, he balanced the burden by filling the other with stones. As he was journeying he was overtaken by a wayfarer, who fell into conversation with him, and in the course of it remarked, "What a fool you must be." "Very probably," was the reply, "but in what particular?" "Why," said the other, "don't you see that if you were to distribute your silk equally between the two panniers and throw away your stones, you would diminish your ass' burden by one half?" "Very true," rejoined the other; "I thank you for your wise counsel; and forthwith the silk merchant threw his stones out on the road, and distributed the cargo in equal portions between the two panniers. As, however, they continued their journey, the merchant remarked, "You are a very clever and discerning person, but how is it that you are in such evil case? Your clothes are soiled and threadbare, and you have scarcely a shoe to your foot." "The truth is," was the reply I am an unfortunate man." "Are you an unfortunate man? Then I will go back and pick up my stones," which he accordingly did, and placed the silk in statu quo. It happened that when he arrived at Bagdad he found that the Caliph was building a new palace, but was brought to a standstill for want of stones. So the merchant sold his stones for more than he got for his silk, and returned rejoicing. Now, my sons, in presenting you each with a silver donkey, I wish to impress upon you this maxim, "Never take the advice of an unfortunate man."

A Queer Case.

While overhauling a file of old papers published in the early part of the present century, I came across a curious legal case, reported in full, and copied from a Stockholm paper. In brief, the case was as follows:

The wife of a poor peasant, who owned a small bit of land close upon the edge of a vast forest, was taken sick with fever, and died. The husband superintended all the arrangements for the funeral. The body of his dead wife was exposed to the view of the few neighbors for a sufficient period, and at the last moment the peasant secretly removed the corpse, and put in its place a log of wood, which was buried with due solemnity.

The neighborhood was infested by ravenous wolves, and the poor man had preserved the body of his wife to be used as a decoy for the wild beasts, upon which the government had fixed a liberal bounty for all destroyed. And the body was taken into the forest, and there used as a decoy for the wolves, by which a large number of them were killed, and among them were two monstrous animals that had long been a terror to owners of sheep and goats in the surrounding district.

The circumstance came to the knowledge of the authorities, and they felt called upon to move in the matter. The peasant was prosecuted, and brought before the court for trial. He plead that he had conversed with his wife upon the subject when she knew she was dying, but before her senses had failed her, and she had consented to the scheme.

The most eminent jurors of the realm became interested, but they could find no law under which the man could be convicted of crime. Finally the peasant was set at liberty, and the bounty for the wolves he had slain paid to him, but at the instigation of the king, Gustavus Adolphus, to whose attention the subject was brought, a new law was enacted, making it a criminal offence to desecrate the dead of the human family in any such way or manner.

A beautiful English woman was walking in the Rue de la Paix, when a French puppy greatly annoyed her by pertinaciously dogging her and glaring at her. She turned upon him and said: "Really, I have not a single sou to give you."

Fighting the S[illegible]

"A fearful day, neighbor! never [illegible] gave [illegible] the then [illegible] king off [illegible] as the [illegible] as then [illegible] dressed by [illegible] and her new [illegible] and falling [illegible] bed as Obama [illegible] ing the name [illegible] and Elohim, [illegible] and com- [illegible] of the order [illegible] make man," etc., [illegible] tions to mention."

[illegible] from one change to another, leaving her robes and her apron on, to appear before the master of ceremonies to receive the oaths. Standing straight, as shown by the elder, bringing her right arm at an angle, then placing it across her throat as the terrible words were uttered by the officiating priest, then drawing and extending her arm straight out and bringing it back to a right angle, striking it straight to the earth, interpreting the oaths as spoken, that her throat should be cut from ear to ear, that her heart should be cut out, and that she be disemboweled and her body be buried in the depths of the sea, etc., if she should divulge anything pertaining to the ceremonies performed in that house.

This is not all the oath by a great deal. Miss Owen then received all the grips, signs, tokens, etc. There are several of these which only the faithful can understand.

Miss Owen then passed on to the other degrees, prayer circles, etc. Passing onward and upward, she came to the veil or arch. This being previous to her marriage, John Miles was on the inside of the veil or arch, Caroline on the outside. There the compass and square were cut over her heart. There was only a sheet to separate John from Caroline.

Then John whispered in her ear and told her the new name she had received below. Nobody on earth knows what that name is but John and Caroline. He then brought Caroline through the veil or arch to be married. Joseph F. Smith sat immediately opposite at the table; John stood at the right and Caroline at the left. After the usual questions were put and answered, the marriage was proceeded with and finished, John and Caroline walking to the sealing-room, where Joseph F. Smith sat on the throne and later stood at the door. Miss Owen walked around to the north side of the altar, and Miles remained on the south side. Joseph F. Smith proceeded with the ceremony, John and Caroline were kneeling, when Joseph F. told them to clasp hands across the altar and kiss each other, which they did. He then sealed them up to everlasting life, to come forth in the morning of the first resurrection to receive power forever and ever. Amen.

Farm Notes.

A good butter cow ought not to eat less than from six to eight quarts of meal per day, but not clear corn meal. Bran is not worth much to make butter, but mixed with corn meal gives health and thrift.

An English farmer very successful during ten years in fattening cattle and sheep, supplied a ration made as fellows: Eight bushels corn soaked in ten pails of water two days, then simmer for an hour or so, afterward mix with fourteen pounds of coarse, cheap sugar, and commingle with cut straw, hay or other fodder.

French gardeners preserve peaches in a fresh condition for a considerable time after they are ripe, by simply packing the fruit, gathered while ripe before being quite soft, in bran in rough boxes and by placing them in a cellar, store room, or other similar place. By this means it is reported that peaches are preserved in a perfectly fresh and well flavored condition for many weeks.

The process of curing sowed corn necessarily occupies some time, since when first cut it contains eighty per cent. of water. One of the best ways of curing sowed corn, is to bind it and set it up in stocks, as all corn is cut and set up. If the bundles are of good size and well bound, and the stocks are well put together, being securely bound at the top, the fodder will cure nicely and keep until fed out in the winter.

White grubs at the roots of cabbages may be destroyed as follows: Loosen the earth close to the root with a hoe, even so much as to disturb the plant a little. Make a solution of one part of soft soap to twelve of soft water, and pour about the root in close contact with the plant. One-fourth of a pint of this solution to a plant two or three times during the season is sufficient. Weaker suds poured on the top would destroy the green worm.

An exchange says: we condemn the practice of heaping up the earth about the stems of fruit trees, as generally recommended. Some say this mound will steady newly planted trees and will also tend to keep away mice. The only effects of the mound, to our thinking, are to soften the bark underneath, rendering it more sensitive to the alterations of freezing and in early spring, and to induce sprouts from the parts so covered.

One hog, kept to the age of one year, if furnished with suitable material, will convert a cartload per month into a fertilizer which will produce a good crop of corn. Twelve loads a year, multiplied by the number of hogs usually kept by our farmers, would make sufficient fertilizing substance to grow the corn used by them; or, in other words, the hog would pay in manure its keeping. In this way we can afford to make pork at very low prices, but in no other way can it be done without loss.

THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

A Lesson from France.

Gen. Butler delivered a good sensible speech recently at the International Dairy Fair in New York upon a subject of interest to the whole of America. Setting out with the statement that may be new to housekeepers who do not keep detailed accounts of every expenditure, namely that people pay more for their butter than for the bread upon which it is spread, he mentioned that the production of butter and cheese in the United States during the past year was worth $350,000,000, or one-seventh more than the value of the wheat crop, and one-third more than the value of the cotton crop of the country. He proceeded to argue that land produces a greater return when it is subdivided into small holdings and well tilled, instead of being held in large tracts and only half cultivated. One of his illustrations was the rapid change of the wheat region within the memory of men yet living. Genesee flour was at one time the favorite brand; then St. Louis flour began to be heard of, and finally Minnesota flour commanded the highest price. Men who were alive when Genesee flour was all the rage have seen California wheat brought in ships 13,000 miles around Cape Horn and ground in the mills at Rochester, situated in the heart of the Genesee country. The system of surface farming which prevails in the United States is believed by General Butler to be the principal cause of boys leaving their paternal home and seeking their fortunes in the cities. So long as there is unlimited land in the market, to be had at nominal rates, the system will hardly be changed, and yet there are examples to be found of the opposite style of farming which can be studied with profit.

England, one might at first suppose, is a country where the careful cultivation of small areas would produce the largest return. But, though England may soon be oppressed by the difficulty of finding means to pay for imported breadstuffs, that country is not well suited for the best style of agriculture, because the land is held by few owners and under the tenant system the greatest average of production can never be reached. France furnishes an example of what can be done where the land is cut up into small plots. Only two-fifths of the French people live in the towns, as contrasted with four-fifths of the English people. Two-thirds of the area of France is actually cultivated, and the average size of farms is less than fifteen acres. France, having a smaller area than the State of Texas, produced more wheat in 1878 than the whole of the United States, the figures being 350,000,000 bushels for France and 240,000,000 bushels for the United States.

In 1876 the United States exported in to England $2,365,000 worth of butter and $12,824,000 worth of cheese; the same year France sent to England $18,672,000 worth of butter, and no appreciable quantity of cheese.

The facts and figures are indeed surprising. The extraordinary productiveness of French soil may be to some extent accounted for by the existence of the beet sugar industry, the beet pulp being excellent food for cattle and making a good quality of manure, while the cultivation of the soil for a root crop makes it all the better for wheat. But it must be remembered that the beet sugar factories are nearly all located in half a dozen Departments in the northern part of the country. The production of sugar, silk and wines in France are a good set-off to the productions of cotton and tobacco in the United States. The inhabitants of Quebec inherit the French custom of subdividing farms among the members of a family, but they have not attained the same perfection in agriculture, perhaps owing to the inferiority of the soil of Quebec. The lesson to be learned from France is a useful one, and General Butler has done a marked service in collecting the information contained in his address for the instruction of American farmers, some of whom may be induced to act upon the hint and strive to improve their condition by a better cultivation of the lands in their possession.

Unhealthy School Rooms.

The Medico-Legal Society of New York has issued a report on School Hygiene, which has more than a local interest. Some time ago this society appointed a committee, consisting of well-known physicians, to investigate health questions connected with the public schools, and their report contains many statements calculated to surprise the public. The committee find that during the vacation months there is a marked decline in the death rate from scarlet fever, but as soon as the schools open the disease increases its ravages. The chairman of the health committee of the Brooklyn board of education remarks that over three thousand children disappear from the time of entering the lowest grade and that of promotion to the next, and assigns the loss to the unsanitary condition of the schools. In many of our own schools, more in the country than in the cities, the want of ventilation is painfully apparent to any one entering them from the fresh outdoor atmosphere. The class rooms are frequently crowded with children, many of whom, either person or clothing, are not over cleanly; the windows are kept closed to prevent a draught, and a large stove, the exhalation from the children's persons and the carbon from their breaths quickly convert the air of the room into a most subtle poison, and it is no wonder that delicate children exposed to such an atmosphere day after day die, and the teachers become delicate and have to resign or wearily drag on incapable of giving their best energy to their work.

The question of ventilation is beset with difficulty, and to obtain absolutely pure air in a crowded room with our present architectural knowledge appears almost impossible. But the existence of these difficulties instead of being a reason for culpable supineness on the part of school boards, ought to be an incentive to extra exertion.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

Why Women

Vanity Fair, i[illegible] a re[illegible] The question w[illegible] we [illegible] week, "Why Men [illegible] marry ing one; but it must be [illegible] ferior in interest [illegible] the Women Marry" In the [illegible] men are in all respects [illegible] than women. The willingness [illegible] to marry is greater and more [illegible] the of men; and, we will add, [illegible] a great deal more wonderful. [illegible] men have, to use a colloquial phrase, the worst of it all through life, we can [illegible] no doubt, and that the matrimonial state as understood by experience, has as a rule, fewer attractions for the man than for men, we also believe to be true. Yet where there are many men who from choice abstain from marrying, and still more who put off marrying till the last practicable moment, we doubt if there are any women worth mentioning who refuse the married state from option and deliberation, and not many marry who postpone marrying till a late period of life from a repugnance to having a husband. That women refuse individual men, and sometimes go on refusing man after man, is true enough; but then their objection is to the man and not to the condition of life the man proposes; or, not unfrequently, their refusal arises from mere skittishness, from a feeling they may do better, or from a cheerful conviction that there is plenty of time to "think about it." As a rule, however, women who have the chance of marrying, marry, and they would marry yet more promptly than they do were it not that they are frequently held back from taking a foolish step by wise parents or dissuading friends. How is this apparent paradox to be explained? There is [illegible] to induce a woman to marry than to induce men; yet men hesitate to marry and women jump at marriage. Some will answer that man is a rational and woman an irrational animal; but over and above the distinction being too uncomplimentary to be true, it is one of those plausible explanations that explain nothing. Again it is sometimes affirmed that, in marrying, men sacrifice liberty, whereas women, in marrying, acquire it. But this is an epigram easily disposed of. When men sacrifice what is called their liberty by marrying, they are already tired of their liberty, or that particular form of it which bachelorhood enjoys, and, were the point thoroughly examined, we suspect it would be found that they abandon a form of liberty of which they are weary for another form they have not possessed.

Learn About the Pulse.

Every intelligent person should know how to ascertain the state of the pulse in health; then, by comparing it with what it is when he is ailing, he may have some idea of the urgency of his case. Parents should know the healthy pulse of each child—as now and then a person is born with a peculiarly slow or fast pulse, and the very case in hand may be of that peculiarity. An infant's pulse is 140; a child of 7, about 80; and, from 20 to 60 years, it is 70 beats a minute, declining to 60 at four-score. A healthful grown person's pulse beats 70 times a minute; there may be good health down to 60; but, if the pulse always exceeds 70, there is a disease; the machine is working itself out, there is a fever or inflammation somewhere, and the body is feeding on itself; as in consumption, when the pulse is quick, that is, over 70, gradually increasing, with decreased chances of cure, until it reaches 110 or 120, when death comes before many days. When the pulse is over 70 for months, and there is a slight cough, the lungs are affected.

The Dangers of the Stock Market.

A man may be incredulous enough to risk his money in the fickle mysteries of a mercurial stock market, but when he gets the Itching Piles, he goes straight for Dr. Swayne's Ointment. Unlike the Bulls and Bears of the Stock Exchange, who clean you out of hard earned cash, it returns your money with interest, in the way of allaying the intense itching, and insuring sweet repose.

HAY AS FOOD FOR HOGS.—But few m[illegible] are aware of the fact that hay is very beneficial to hogs, but it is true nevertheless. Hogs need rough food as well as horses, cattle, or fl[illegible] human r[illegible]. To prepare it you should have a cutting-box (or hay-cutter), and the greene[illegible] the hay the better. Cut the hay as short as oats or shorter, and mix with bran, shorts, or middlings, and feed as other food. Hogs soon learn t[illegible] like it, and if soaked in swill, as other slop food, is highly relished by them. In winter use for the hogs the same hay you feed to your horses and you will find that, while it saves bran, shorts, or other food, it puts on flesh as rapidly as anything that can be given them. The use of hay can be commenced as early as the grass will do to cut, and when run through the cutting-box can be used to advantage by simply soaking in fresh water until it sours.

A Foolish Mistake.

Don't make a mistake of confounding a remedy of merit with quack medicines. We speak from experience when we say that Parker's Ginger Tonic is a sterling health restorative which will do all that is claimed for it. We have used it ourselves with the happiest results for Rheumatism and when worn out by overwork. See adv. Times.

To enjoy a thing exclusively is commonly to exclude yourself from the true enjoyment of it.

A Notion of Ship Owners.

[illegible] the smaller [illegible] but its com[illegible] in the [illegible] of all [illegible] most fre[illegible] New York [illegible] which connects [illegible] and forms the [illegible] St. Peters[illegible] hundred [illegible] description [illegible] In Norway, [illegible] every [illegible] or less di[illegible] shipping inte[illegible] To [illegible] so warm [illegible] is a point [illegible] those thousands of [illegible] coasts of Norway [illegible] farmer the most [illegible] of placing his savings [illegible] sea and buy a part in a [illegible] Norwegian vessel, carry [illegible] England and coal back to Denmark, or dried fish to Naples and oranges back to St. Petersburg represents the fortune of a whole village or parish, in which even the servant girls may have a share, and to many a well-to-do Norwegian farmer the only source from which he draws, and can draw, ready money is his ship part.

Quick and Sure.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into the grave, when by using Parker's Ginger Tonic they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength quickly and surely coming back to them.

The impression is very general that when consumption once attacks the human frame a cure is impossible, and this is not to be wondered at considering the ravages of this terrible disease. It seems that this is not the case. A short time ago a series of examinations was made at the Edinburgh Hospital, which developed the fact that the lungs of not less than one-third of those who died when over forty years of age were in a condition that could be accounted for in no other way than by the supposition that at some period in their lives consumption had existed, and had afterwards been checked or cured. Portions of the lungs had been destroyed, but the cavities formed had been healed by contraction and adhesion of their walls, or the disintegrated substance had been shut in by the formation of fibrous tissue. Similar conclusions have been reached in Paris, which seems to show that incipient consumption is more curable and more often cured than is generally supposed.

"Supper is now ready in the smoking car," shouted the brakeman, and a young man from Hartford, who was on his way to San Francisco, got up and went forward to see what the brakeman meant. He went into the smoking car, and found a party of Bavarian emigrants cooking two kinds of cheese and three denominations of sausages on the stove. He came out very pale, and gave the brakeman a half a dollar to stand on the platform and burn matches under his nose. "Was it very bad?" an old gentleman asked him when he returned to the coach. "Sir," said the young man of Hartford, "you'll never smell anything like it until you have been dead about six months."

BORAX FOR COLDS.—A writer in the Medical Record cites a number of cases in which borax is proved a most effectual remedy in certain forms of colds. He states that in sudden hoarseness, or loss of voice in public speakers or singers, from colds, relief for an hour or so, as by magic, may be often obtained by slowly dissolving, partially swallowing, a lump of borax the size of a garden pea, or about three or four grains, held in the mouth ten minutes before speaking or singing. This produces a profuse secretion of saliva, or "watering" of the mouth and throat—probably restoring the voice or tone to the dry vocal cords.

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR
—WITH—
New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim, that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

The tax commission appointed by Gov. Jerome have prepared a tax bill to be submitted at the next session of the legislature. It will be found in the Detroit papers and will repay a careful perusal.

The Guiteau trial is slowly but surely approaching its end. Before another issue of the HERALD reaches our readers, the case will be submitted to the jury and a verdict of guilty rendered—that is, if the villain gets his deserts.

The dead-lock in the Albany legislature remains unbroken. Perhaps it would be just as well not to break it. The state would survive without any legislation this winter and it would be a strong argument in favor of biennial sessions.

Scoville and Reed seem to be only assistant attorneys in the great trial. Guiteau himself is the leading counsel. He has himself shaped the course of the defense from the outset, and yet his assistants claim that Guiteau is insane.

A farmer down in Jersey has invented a method of preserving watermelons. If his invention shall prove a success he may be classed as a public benefactor. To enjoy watermelons all the year round will be a mighty stride towards the millennium.

The latest cabinet gossip declares that Judge Folger will soon be appointed to fill Judge Hunt's place on the Supreme Bench, and that Ex-Senator Conkling will take his place as Secretary of the Treasury. The stalwarts seem to be taking their innings now.

Small-pox is increasing to an alarming extent in many of the large cities of the land, and it has invaded many smaller places. In this case an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Local boards of health in many places throughout the state are taking vigorous measures to control the epidemic if it comes.

The report of Commissioner Morley entitled Michigan and its Resources is already having a very beneficial influence. The Free Press says that Mr. Morley is the most applied-to official in the city. Every mail brings a large number of letters of inquiry. Some of the Detroit teachers have applied for them as text books for reading.

An effort to induce the boys and girls to read the useful books in the public library has been successful in Worcester, Mass. The teachers in the schools made a practice of referring to the contents of solid and interesting works. Thus the pupils were led to choose a kind of reading matter that formerly was not noticed. The practice adopted by our own schools of observing the birth day anniversaries of literary men is producing a similar beneficial result.

Although to a casual observer, the conviction of Guiteau may appear to be a forgone conclusion, still there is one feature of the trial which should not be overlooked. The jury are prohibited from reading the newspapers. They are thus kept in ignorance of what the actual state of public sentiment is respecting the character of the prisoner. Guiteau has shrewdly taken advantage of this fact, and is daily parading to the jury the declaration that people sympathize with him and that the newspapers are all on his side. The report has already obtained currency that two of the jury are in doubt and that a disagreement may be looked for.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

The Mad Dog Theory.

Boston Post: Some one truly says that Guiteau may be "cracked," but that he should be hanged on what is suggestively called "the mad dog theory."

The Star Routers.

Kansas Constitution: It is mighty funny. The star route ring was crushed, and he was unannounced. They didn't like McVeagh, and he disappeared. They didn't like Blaine, and he retired. They didn't like James, and he had to go.

An Unhappy Situation.

Chicago Times: Mr. Speaker Keifer is daily acting as if he found that the mischievous boys of the House were putting heat plus in the chair to which Don Cameron invited him. It is an unhappy situation for the man with the gavel.

A Truthful Remark.

Philadelphia Times: The determined effort of a large number of members of the Tammany organization, who have heretofore been supporters of John Kelly, to retire that wayward boss, seems to promise success. The revolt has been growing from the beginning. It will be a decent thing to get Boss Kelly into private life.

Gerrymandering Utah.

Chicago Herald: The Polygamous church of Utah must be crushed. The sooner the people realize the fact the easier the feat will be accomplished. As good a way to commence crushing as any that has yet been suggested would be to cut the Territory up and divide it among the Territories surrounding it in such a way as to drown the Mormon vote with the Gentile article. Gerrymandering has been put to bad uses enough. Let it have at least one righteous application.

A Pretty Kettle of Fish.

Cincinnati Enquirer: There is a pretty kettle of fish in Chicago. The Supreme Court has decided that their Probate Court is unconstitutional and has been for the four years last past. This makes all the wills probated void, and nullifies all the divorces. The only people made happy by this decision are those who, having been divorced, were married. Their last marriages are void, and they are thus saved a second resort to divorce courts.

Schurz and Reform.

Boston Traveller: Mr. Schurz wanted an excuse in 1872 for going into the Democratic party because the national hay-rack seemed about to be located on that side, and hence—reform. In 1876 Mr. Schurz saw the hay-rack coming back to the Republican side, and hence again—reform. Mr. Schurz got into the Cabinet and must needs cut a great figure as Secretary of the Interior, and hence once more—reform, Indian reform with Ponca attachment.

The Big Land Steal.

Cooperstown Freeman's Journal: The lands involved in the issue with the Northern Pacific Railroad would almost make two states equal each in area to the State of New York. They include a large proportion of the great wheat-producing belt of this continent. This is all that need be said of their value and of the duty of Congress to the people in respect of them. The great "land steal" should be rebuked and the people protected from wholesale robbery.

Can the President Afford it.

Buffalo Courier: It is surmised that Secretary Folger will be transferred to the Supreme bench, and that thus President Arthur will be enabled to offer Mr. Conklin the treasury portfolio. If the latter should now enter the Cabinet of Mr. Arthur he would go into it, not as Seward went into Lincoln's, or Blaine into Garfield's Cabinet, but as one lifted up by the President's personal favor and partiality. Would Mr. Conklin accept a cabinet office tendered him under such circumstances, and is Mr. Arthur ready to take a step which would weaken rather than strengthen his Administration.

A Wonderful State.

Pittsburg Telegraph: A few days ago word came from an Ohio town that a woman there who had been speechless for three years felt a curious sensation in her tongue, and concluded that if she were only to try to, she could talk as well as anybody, and forthwith trying she succeeded.

Now word comes from another Ohio town that a man there who had been blind for eight years felt a curious sensation in his eyes, and the first thing he knew to his delight was the perfect restoration of his sight. It is a very small and very dull town in Ohio that can not report something phenomenal.

H. H. Warner & Co.—Sirs—I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for kidney disease, and found it very beneficial. George A. Cobb.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was republished in this paper and was a subject of much conversation, both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days since which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull indefinite pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's disease which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are the sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them, and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement Doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"Then this is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of so-called diseases are torturing people to-day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some one of its many forms. It is a Hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist at the University. If you want facts there are any quantity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symptoms, and that there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the doctor's words the reporter bade him good day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop Haven and others. This is terrible and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It must be plain to every one that something must be done to check this increase or there is no knowing where it may end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to notice. A prominent professor of a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to draw the contrast between healthy and unhealthy fluids he had a vial the contents of which were drawn from his own person. And now, gentlemen, he said, as we have seen the unhealthy indication, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health," and he submitted his own fluid to the microscope. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color went, command left him and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own and very often none at all. Usually no two persons have the same symptoms and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest suspicion of any kidney difficulty should be enough to make every sufferer resort to any one. I know what I am talking about for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"A very prominent case but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from the experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience: what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this caused you to immediately procure it?"

"No, it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities with Craig the discoverer, and saw the physicians prescribing and using it and saw that Dr. Craig was unable, with his facilities, to supply the medicine to thousands who wanted it. I therefore determined, as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements, and next paid a visit to Dr. S. A. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analyst, courteously answered the questions that were propounded him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir, I did not think it possible. It was seldom indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him."

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statements they make, cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing and that it can be cured.

SEEKERS AFTER HEALTH.

Unfortunates who are seeking to renew their health, are many. So often have they been deceived by the advertisements of worthless compounds, that they are discouraged, and refuse to believe anything they read in the papers. Therefore, the best advertisement of a really good medicine is the reputation it has gained to places where it is being sold. No other remedy ever discovered has grown so rapidly in public favor as that true medicinal tonic called Brown's Iron Bitters. In localities where its extraordinary merits have become fully known and realized by those who have been in ill health, the sale is unprecedented. One druggist in our city reports the sale of 238 bottles in one week. It is indeed a wonderful, health-giving, life-saving preparation. It is soothing and refreshing in its effect, and strengthens every part of the body and creates healthy appetite and digestion, even when the system is almost destroyed by the many hurtful cathartics so commonly used. Reader, beware! duty demands that you try Brown's Iron Bitters, if your health is poor from any cause.—Enquirer.

Hudson Gazette: There is only one time in a man's life when he feels so supremely disgusted with himself and the world that he would like to crawl over a picket fence and break himself into several pieces. And that is when he bites into a cotton decoy biscuit at a church fair, to the music of the orchestra and the giggling of a lot of old maids and silly girls.

It is well known that the kidneys are the human sewers, which wash away the impurities and debris. When they become clogged or inactive, Kellogg's Columbian Oil will remove the cause and create a healthy action, and effect a permanent cure.

Hudson Gazette: J. L. Dewey, of Medina, met with a very serious accident on Tuesday afternoon. In falling a tree in the woods he was struck by a limb and had one of his arms broken in two places just below the shoulder, and was severely bruised about the chest. The blow rendered him almost senseless, and when he came to he was nearly frozen, having lain for two or three hours on the snow or frozen ground. Dr. Nix, of this village, was summoned, and has the injured man under his care.

I know Hop Bitters will bear recommendation honestly. All who use them confer upon them the highest encomiums, and give them credit for making cures—all the proprietors claim for them. I have kept them since they were first offered to the public. They took high rank from the first, and maintained it, and are more called for than all others combined. So long as they keep up their high reputation for purity and usefulness, I shall continue to recommend them—something I have never done with any other patent medicine.

Adrian Times: There are few places we should think that were less likely to explode than a blacksmith shop, though it is true there is often a good deal of wind there, but it usually has free vent. But on Wednesday there was a genuine explosion in Brown's blacksmith's shop at Sand Creek.—Work was progressing as usual, the bellows were in active operation, and the fire was feeling the incentive of the blast when suddenly an explosion occurred. The bellows were blown to pieces, sundry chunks of iron which had been used as weights on the upper half of the bellows were blown all over the shop, but luckily nobody was hurt. No satisfactory explanation of the occurrence can be given.

Deerfield Record: A lively runaway occurred in the village, Monday morning. A young man, son of C. Haidle, was driving into town, and just as he drove off of the bridge, his team became frightened at a steam threshing engine in front of L. Smith's blacksmith's shop, and started at a lively pace up River street. The young man who was sitting on the reach bolster of the boxless wagon, at the start, finally stopped the frightened horses, by running them into the fence in front of W. S. McKay's but he narrowly escaped serious injury, as in his efforts to stop the team, he was dragged forward and under the reach, to which he clung by one leg thrown over it, in which position he rode nearly the whole distance. No serious damage was done.

Suggestions to Teachers.

Candidates for examination will remember that under the present school law of this state, no certificate can hereafter be granted to any candidate who does not pass a satisfactory examination in civil government and U. S. history. Those teachers who have not paid attention to these subjects would do well to first become well grounded in the frame-work, or outlines, leaving the details for subsequent filling in. Townsend's shorter course in Civil Government, an abridgment of his larger work, presents the subject in a concise manner, and is probably the best work published for use in our primary schools. Chautauqua text book of American history, No. 21, gives a good outline of American history; and this in connection with some larger work, (Barnes's Brief History is good,) will enable teachers to lay a good foundation for future study and research. We would recommend teachers to procure these or some similar works for study and reference. CHARLES D. WEST,

Sec. Co. Board of Examiners.
